Harrison To Ask Vote Today on Fiscal Study

McNary Drops Objections, Pledges G. O. P. Support To Cut Expenses

'Help' From the Enemy

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Senate acceptance of the Congressional joint fiscal study plan was indicated last night, after Senate Minority Leader McNary withdrew his objections and called for Republican cooperation "down the line" on the President's budget cuts.

Chairman Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, announced he will call his joint budget-tax study resolution from the Senate table today and ask for an immediate vote.

In the House, where Democratic leaders were proposing to sidetrack the resolution because it "comes too late," Minority Leader Martin echoed McNary's support of the Harrison plan and said House Republicans generally will support it.

"I regard it as an important move to restore Congressional control of budget policy," said Martin. "I am going along with the President's cuts."

Couzens' Tax Plan Studied

McNary's objections to the overall Congressional study of finances, to keep within the statutory debt limit, were withdrawn folowing assurances by Senate leaders that defense expenditures would be studied as part of the joint inquiry.

The Senate Republican leader declared unconditionally that he would oppose emergency increases in national defense spending.

"We are going to vote against all appropriation increases, even when it hurts, and that goes for defense appropriations, too," said McNary. "And I am going to oppose additional taxes, because they won't be necessary if we make the cuts the President recommended and some that he didn't."

Harrison said that with Republican objections withdrawn and Administration support, he hoped his resolution would be adopted today without any intermediate reference to committee. If the House failed to approve it then, he said it would be "their responsibility."

The Mississippi Democrat declared indefinite delay of appropriation bills would not be necessary to achieve his objective of an overall agreement by 24 members of four House and Senate committees on budget and tax policies.

Sales Tax "Too Hot"

Meanwhile, it was learned that the old Couzens plan, unsuccessfully advanced in 1933, to increase by 10 per cent or an alternative amount the net tax collected from corporate and individual income taxpayers, is being studied.

Tax experts roughly estimate the percentage increase would raise $554,000,000 in 1941 on the basis of anticipated national income. The President has asked that $460,000,000 be raised to pay the cost of his emergency defense budget.

With only a limited number of tax sources remaining, House Ways and Means and Senate Finance committees, if not a joint fiscal study group, probably will weigh the old Couzens plan, along with middle bracket income tax increase possibilities, and the President's

5 Injured as Cold Continues; Low of 12 Today Is Forecast

Maryland Rushes Food to Ice-Locked Smith Island; Attempts to Release Oyster Fleet; Snow Closes Schools

Five persons were injured in ice-caused accidents and a man was seriously frozen here yesterday as Forecaster Francis W. Reichelderfer predicted a season's low of 12 for Washington and zero for the suburbs by dawn.

The weatherman, however, said that slowly rising temperatures later today would bring an end to the two weeks of sub-freezing weather, with normal mild weather to return by Friday.

Meanwhile, Maryland authorities were forced to rush food to communities and fishing vessels isolated by ice in the Chesapeake Bay area. Coast Guard cutters cut a channel through the ice for a rescue ship bringing urgently needed milk and other provisions to ice-locked Smith Island, in Chesapeake Bay.

Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor of Maryland ordered the State conservation steamer Governor McLane to attempt to free the bottled-up oyster fleet, stuck in the Shoptank River and Cambridge Creek. The freeze-in has seriously hurt the oystermen, since prices are good right now. Snows ranging up to 16 inches, have hampered the trapping industry.

Washington dug out of its 5-inch snow yesterday after 1,000 men and 200 trucks had worked all night long, but sanding crews had to be rotated on a 24-hour basis to keep slippery streets from becoming dangerous.

Accidents attributed to slippery streets here sent four men and a woman to the hospital.

Fifteen-year-old Arthur Grasso, of Takoma Park, alighted from a street car at New Jersey avenue and H street northeast, and fell under the wheels of a laundry truck. He escaped with minor injuries.

In autoskidding mishaps Orris E. Minar, 17, of 5339 Nevada avenue northwest, received face lacerations; Romaine Costello, 28, of 1234 Thirteenth street northwest, suffered serious head injuries.

Found unconscious at the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad crossing on River road, Bladensburg, Joseph Herbert, 43, of 304 E street northwest, was roused to Casualty Hospital, suffering from cold and exposure.

D.C. Committee Volunteers To Be Sought

Rep. Taylor to Offer Inducements; Casey Asks to Withdraw

A call for "volunteers" to serve on an enlarged House sub-committee on District appropriations will be made today at this session's first full meeting of the House Appropriations Committee.

Chairman Edward T. Taylor, of the full committee, said he would offer special inducements to experienced members of major sub-committees who cooperate with his plan to give the District a "real sub-committee."

At the same time Taylor disclosed that Representative Casey (Democrat), of Massachusetts, who served under Representative Collins, of Mississippi, former District chairman, has asked to be withdrawn from the subcommittee. Casey, it was reported, is quitting the District group because he was passed over in the selection of a successor to Collins. Casey's views favoring spending were believed frowned upon by those who were looking for a new subcommittee chairman.

Taylor, who last week named Representative Millard F. Caldwell, of Florida, to the unwanted and long vacant subcommittee chairmanship, said he wanted to "elevate the standards and work of the subcommittee."

"The District has been an orphan of the House long enough," said the House Appropriations chairman. "I know I have picked a good man in Caldwell. I want other competent men to serve with him, and I will put it up to the more experienced members as their patriotic duty in my call for volunteers."

Taylor said he seeks "two or three" more Democrats to serve on the group, and may ask ranking

Court Voids NLRB Ruling On Labor Pacts

Order Directing Written Contract With Inland Steel Is Voided

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 9.—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals ruled today that the Wagner act does not compel an employer to sign a contract with a labor organization.

The three judges reversed a precedent-setting National Labor Relations Board order directing the Inland Steel Co. to bargain with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and to put any agreement they may reach into writing.

The court remanded the case to the NLRB for a new hearing and ruled that under the Wagner act collective bargaining procedure is "mandatory" but the "result is not."

It explained that if Congress "had intended to place upon the employer the duty of entering into a written agreement, it would have so provided."

The judges concluded that the examiner who conducted hearings on the C. I. O. union's complaint against Inland showed a "hostile attitude" toward the company. The court made this criticism of labor board practices:

"This record as a whole discloses the danger of imposing upon a single agency the multiple duties of prosecutor, judge, jury and executioner."

Examiner Held Prejudiced

The labor board order, issued in 1938, was hailed at the time because the C. I. O.'s demand for a written agreement was the paramount issue in the "Little Steel" strike against Inland and three other independent steel makers in 1937.

Today's sweeping opinion, handed down by Judge J. Earl Major and concurred in by Judges Evan A. Evans and Will M. Sparks, set forth:

"In its decision, the board recognizes that signed agreements are not required by the act in all instances and that an oral agreement would not be invalid 'if acceptable to both parties.'"

The court devoted a large part of its 31-page opinion to criticisms of the conduct of Charles A. Wood, Labor Board trial examiner, who presided at the 3½-month hearing.

The judges concluded that "he laid aside all semblance of serving in a judicial capacity."

They held that Wood devoted little time to the examination of "witnesses favorable to the board" but examined Inland witnesses at great length.

Wool Shirts? Gad, Sir! It's Mutiny

Houston, Tex., Jan. 9 (AP).—Nineteen policemen were suspended indefinitely today for wearing blue woolen shirts instead of the regulation white broadcloth.

Police Chief L. C. Brown said the men were guilty of "concerted premeditated and deliberate organized insubordination."

25 Sibley Hospital Workers Stricken With Food Poisoning

Twenty-five Sibley Memorial Hospital employes were stricken with food poisoning yesterday after eating lunch in the hospital dining room.

Dr. Louis Taylor, president of the hospital, described the epidemic as a "very acute outbreak." Although unable to determine the cause, he said the employes suffered "apparently from something they had for lunch."

Hospital authorities refused to reveal the identity of those stricken. It was learned, however, the number included several nurses as well as clerks and other employes.

Acting under orders of Health Officer George Ruhland, Dr. James G. Cumming Health Department epidemiologist, began an investigation.

Dr. Cumming said the stricken employes last night were still "very sick" but declared all were responding to treatment. Some, he asserted, will be able to return to work today.

The Health Department officer confirmed that the poisoning "presumably came from something in the noon meal." He said he was conducting an analysis to ascertain what specific food was responsible.

No patients were affected by the food, it was reported.

Russia Admits Retreat Before Finns; Italian Planes Back Pact With Hungary; 6 Ships Sunk as Bitter Sea War Rages

Rome's Warning To Soviets, Nazis Implied as Pilots Stay in Budapest

Copyright by New York Times

Belgrade, Jan. 9.—Quantities of Italian military airplanes have begun to arrive in Hungary, supporting Budapest reports that the recent talks of Foreign Ministers Count Ciano and Count Csaky resulted in an Italian guarantee of Hungary's frontiers.

It is known that a Hungarian arms purchasing mission was recently in Rome, and the planes might be a result of this trip. However, the Italian pilots are remaining in Budapest, which would indicate there is more to it than a simple commercial transaction. From increasing aid that fascism is giving to Finland, Russia should know by now that Italy means business in its resistance to sovietism.

It is certain that Italian help to Hungary in case of a Soviet attack was a dominant subject of the brief Ciano-Csaky talk.

Dilemma for Germany

[However, the fact such an arrangement also would be applicable in event of a German attack on Hungary, was cited by foreign observers in Budapest as evidence Germany now must make an unwilling choice between continued friendship with Italy and Hungary and her accords with Russia. This view was reported in an Associated Press dispatch from Budapest.—Editor's note.]

Advices from Budapest said Count Csaky was planning to return to Italy shortly, possibly to formalize the Italo-Hungarian accord. Other Hungarian sources, however, said he would not go to Rome, but their failure to deny he planned some sort of trip gave rise to speculation he might visit Belgrade or Bucharest.

Csaky Saw Mussolini

It is reported by a high Hungarian source that Count Csaky actually saw Premier Mussolini secretly in a sequel of his Venice meeting with Ciano. According to this informant the Hungarian foreign minister flew from Venice to Rome this morning before leaving for Budapest.

Considering the close personal friendship between the two statesmen and the number of mutually important problems, it would seem a logical complement of the Venice parleys.

While, naturally, all sorts of rumors accompany meetings, such as Ciano's with Csaky, the problems discussed were obvious: the Rumano-Hungarian question, how Italy can aid Hungary against Russia or Germany, how Yugoslavia can be prevailed upon to allow Italian troops to go to Hungary's aid, if necessary.

The principal stumbling block at the moment is Yugoslavia. Prominent Hungarians, including Count Csaky, fear Yugoslavia would not

3 Die as Mine Splits Liner; Nazi Planes Gun, Bomb Coast Vessels, Destroy 3

By the Associated Press

London (Wednesday), Jan. 10.—A terrific mine explosion last night ripped the 10,002-ton British passenger liner Dunbar Castle in two after Nazi warplanes, in an intense invasion of British coastal waters, had bombed or machine-gunned 11 British or neutral ships, sinking at least three.

Two other ships, or six in all, were newly reported sunk in the last few days in the sharp burst of sea-air warfare. Loss of life totaled at least 34.

Superb rescue work off the southeast coast saved all the Dunbar Castle's 48 passengers and all but three of her 150 crewmen. The master and two seamen were killed.

Passengers from the wrecked liner, owned by the Union Castle Mail Steamship Line and bound for the Cape of Good Hope with 198 men, women and children, reached London early today, some of them wrapped in blankets.

Planes Sink Three Ships

They told how the explosion plunged the ship into darkness and said lifeboats had trouble getting away because of the suction of water, rushing through the broken hull.

The ship cracked clean in half after the boats were away, they related.

Capt. H. A. Causton was on the bridge at time of the explosion. He was found dead at the door of his cabin. His body and those of the two crewmen were brought ashore.

The admiralty announced that one British vessel and two Danish ships had been sunk by German aircraft, just off the east coast to the north of where the Dunbar Castle was blown up. Raked by machine-gun fire were five fishing smacks, a lightship tender and two other ships, unidentified as yet. One man was killed and 32 wounded out of the tender's crew of 40.

2 Danish Ships Included

The ships which the admiralty said were sunk by German aircraft were:

S. S. Gowrie, British, 689 tons, crew saved.

S. S. Ivan Kondrup, Danish, 3,369 tons, 10 missing, 11 saved.

S. S. Feddy, Danish, 955 tons, fate of crew unknown.

The Nazi aerial attacks, which involved nearly a dozen ships Tuesday along the east English coast, were aimed at unescorted vessels, the admiralty charged. One of the Danish ships sank three hours after a bomb smashed her stern.

Besides the Dunbar Castle, reports reached London of the mining and sinking of the 8,485-ton British tanker British Liberty, in the North Sea, with 20 crewmen missing and believed lost. The 176-ton Dutch motor vessel Truida hit a mine and sank off the Nether-

U. S. Prepares for Complaints Over Old-Age Pension Checks

By Alfred Friendly.

To hear anticipated complaints from more than 5,000 beneficiaries of old-age payments this year, the Social Security Board is about to establish a Nation-wide claims appeals organization, it was learned yesterday.

The grievance machinery will be centered about "circuit-riding" referees or umpires, probably one for each of the board's 12 regions. These officers will travel from one field office to the next, holding hearings. The number of referees has not been definitely set and will vary according to the volume of complaints.

Above the regional umpires there will be a central appellate agency, to act in a coordinating capacity and to hear appeals from decision of regional men. Initially, the board may take over this function, although eventually a separate body may be created.

Details of the program have been under consideration for several days.

The board anticipates it will make old-age insurance payments to between 700,000 and 1,000,000 Americans this year. Basing its guess—and it is only a guess—on the experience of unemployment and accident compensations boards, it estimates that from ½ of 1 per cent to 1 per cent of all beneficiaries will have complaints that will result in hearings before appeals officers.

Many more people, of course, are expected to complain that their payments do not equal the amount to which they believe they are entitled. Most of these complaints, however, are expected to be settled in the board's 400 odd field offices, where the beneficiary's wage record can be brought out and reviewed over the table with the complainant. Many of the complaints in the first years of the program, it is anticipated, will result from ignorance.

If, however, the beneficiary is still dissatisfied, or if there is a serious discrepancy in the accounts or employment history as conceived by the worker and the board, the case will be set for hearing.

Chief function of the appeals officer at the hearing will be to establish the facts—where the complain-

Grimmer Warfare Coming, Chamberlain Warns British

Federation of Europe Built on Alliance With France Foreseen

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 9.—Prime Minister Chamberlain warned Britain's people today they are approaching "a phase of this war much grimmer than anything we have seen yet," but envisaged a reward for their sacrifices in a peacetime federation of European or world nations built upon British-French collaboration.

The prime minister spoke at a lord mayor's luncheon. He had lost none of his voice and gesture, and his emotion was of a dramatic quality. It was the first of a series of "realization" speeches by which his altered government seeks to bring home to the people what they are up against in their conflict against what Chamberlain called "the powers of wickedness."

Chamberlain did not mention the overwhelming sensation of last week-end—the removal from the cabinet of Leslie Hore-Belisha, the war secretary.

In his speech, the prime minister gave no quarter to Nazi Germany and left no avenue for an "easy peace."

He warned the German people that they "must realize that the responsibility for the prolongation of this war and all the suffering it may bring in the coming year is

Stark Reveals New Step to Fortify Guam

Fight Revived as Fund For Improvement of Harbor Draws Attack

By John G. Norris

A new Congressional fight over fortification of Guam was started yesterday when Administration plans for development of the western Pacific island—rejected last year—were put before Congress.

Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations, told the House Naval Affairs Committee, considering a $1,300,000,00 naval expansion bill, that President Roosevelt's budget estimates, now before Congress, contained $4,000,000 for dredging, breakwaters and water runways for planes at the far-away American possession.

52,000-Ton Ships Planned

As the naval chieftain revealed presence of the funds in a lump sum harbor improvement project, Republican committeemen challenged legality of the procedure. Last year the House refused to authorize specifically a similar project, while the current request for funds is made under a general law providing for such work.

Stark also revealed that the Navy is contemplating construction of 52,000-ton battleships next year. The great vessels, 7,000 tons larger than four now projected, would dwarf any dreadnaughts afloat or building.

Construction of "superbattleships" larger than this, such as has been discussed of late, is not favored by "a majority of naval officers," the admiral stated, listing a number of disadvantages of larger vessels.

To Increase Gun Power

The two 45,000-tonners just started and two others in the present budget are intended by the Navy to make up a special high-speed unit of the battle fleet, Stark said. They will make 33 knots, he revealed, 5½ knots more than other

President Tells Churchmen of Peace 'Ideals'

Clergy Advised Time Is Not Opportune for Publishing Proposals

President Roosevelt said yesterday that he had outlined certain tentative suggestions for peace to a group of church leaders who called to see him during the day.

He asked the churchmen not to disclose these proposals, he explained, since he did not want them referred to as 14 points or any other number of points.

(This reference was to Woodrow Wilson's famous 14-point peace program put forward ten months before the Armistice in 1918.—Editor's Note.)

He explained that he had certain ideals in mind which should not at this time be reduced to factual language.

Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, one of those attending the conference, said upon leaving the White House that the President hoped the general desire for peace "might find some practical encouragement by spring."

Dr. Weaver is chairman of the committee on public relations of the Northern and Southern Baptist Convention.

Mr. Roosevelt explained that the church group had been called in as part of the program for mobilizing church sentiment in the effort

City of Flint En Route Home

By the United Press

The American freighter City of Flint whose odyssey to Europe last fall led to serious international complications, at last is en route home, the State Department revealed last night.

The ship sailed Saturday night or Sunday from Narvik, Norway, and is expected to take 20 days for the trip, according to the American Minister, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman.

U. S. Promises Mrs. Dahl To Press Effort to Free Flier

The State Department yesterday promised to continue its efforts to free Lieut. Harold "Whitey" Dahl, American aviator, held in "protective custody" in Spain by Generalissimo Franco.

The promise was made by Counselor R. Walton Moore following a visit by the imprisoned flier's wife, platinum blonde Mrs. Edith Rogers Dahl.

Mrs. Dahl paused in Washington yesterday en route to Chicago to fill a theater engagement and visited the State Department to check progress in her fight to win Dahl's freedom.

Moore, confirming the conversation with Mrs. Dahl, said Ambassador to Spain Alexander W. Weddell was trying to effect the release of approximately a dozen Americans. "There is no reason to doubt they will be released," Moore said.

A photograph of Mrs. Dahl sent to Franco won her husband a death-sentence reversal after he had been shot down while flying a loyalist plane in the civil war.

Mrs. Dahl sings and plays the violin in stage appearances. She makes no bones about capitalizing on her husband's plight "because I need the money."

Invaders Exhausted

By the Associated Press

Moscow (Wednesday), Jan. 10.—An official communique early today admitted the Red army had withdrawn "several kilometers" east of Suomussalmi as a result of severe fighting in that sector on the Finnish eastern front.

(Finnish army leaders have declared two Russian divisions, the 163d and the 44th, were wiped out in the last 12 days in fighting north and southeast of Suomussalmi, 18 miles west of the frontier.

(This is the first time the Russians have reported anything but Red Army successes, although since the second week of the six-week-old war, the brief Moscow communiques have mentioned little more than minor patrol activity.

All Quiet, Finns Say

(Yesterday's Finnish communique, which reported quiet on all fronts, covered only Monday's fighting. Tuesday's action, which the Soviet communique covers, will not be described by the Finnish high command until late today).

The text of the Russian communique said:

"On January 9, in the Ukhta sector, fighting between infantry units took place, as a result of which Soviet troops withdrew several kilometers east of Suomussalmi.

"In the Repola and Petrozavodsk sectors, there were activities of reconnoitering detachments.

"On the Karelian Isthmus there was infrequent artillery fire.

Copyright, 1940, N. Y. Tribune, Inc.

Rovaniemi, Finland, Jan. 9.—While Finnish troops are mopping up in the sector east of Suomussalmi and driving the remnants of the Red Army's 44th division back across the Russian border, another Russian army is fighting for its life 150 miles to the north, around Salla.

Fighting in the Salla sector has gone on almost steadily ever since the Russian invaders tried to drive a wedge across Finland to Kemijarvi near the Swedish border.

In the first days of the war the Red forces reached Salla, which they found in ruins. They pressed on, one part branching off toward the northwest in the directions of Savukoski and Palkossnniemi and another heading toward Koutaljarvi and Kemijarvi, southwest of Salla. The northern column of the Red force was cut off between Savukoski and Pelkosennieme and suffered frightful losses, according to the Finns, and its remnants fell back to Salla. The southern column was

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

MR. JOE DOAKES,
MIDDLETOWN,
IOWA.

Dear Joe:

You want the lowdown on Washington, so you can explain to your wife what's going on. On account of the times you loaned me your flivver when I was courting I'll do my best to oblige.

Harlan Miller

You can tell Lola from me that it's more important for her to understand her husband than to understand what Congress is doing.

* * * *

If she gives you macaroni and hamburger for supper three nights in a row (as you say) that's as dangerous as a filibuster on Capitol Hill. She can't keep the Republic on an even keel that way.

* * * *

The Congressmen arrived here with fire in their eye, sworn to save the Nation by seeing that the right people are re-elected this year. If you keep that in mind you'll have no trouble understanding their speeches.

* * * *

What Congress wants to do is make everybody happy except the sinful varmints who are after their jobs and their friends' jobs. To do this they're ready to raise or lower taxes, or both.

"—but they don't get paid"

Remember the gabfests we used to listen to when we were kids, around the stove at Larsen's general store? Well, that's what it sounds like when a lot of members of Congress chew the fat. Except that the Congressmen get paid for it.

* * * *

But the members spill their lingo out on the floor of the House or Senate, where the reporters can hear 'em. That's where they reduce taxes, out in the open. When they increase taxes they do the work in committees, usually in secret session.

* * * *

If you want a slant on what goes on at a committee meeting of Congress, you and Lola go to a meeting of the school board. A Congressional committee is like a school board except maybe less intellectual in spots.

* * * *

You'll hear a great hullaballoo about the Labor Board, because some people think they caught the New Deal there with its pants down. Chances are they'll find it has stuffed a pillow in its pants by now.

* * * *

They'll go through the motions of balancing the budget on somebody else's shoulders. But they'll try to make it painless like Lola going through your pants pockets at night.

"—they gain weight down here"

You'd laugh to see the way your Congressman takes on weight down here. Back home among you constituents he looks like a 145-pounder, but on his third day in Washington he looks like he'd scale 210.

* * * *

You ask if there's going to be a war and if it'd be a good idea for you and Lola to have another baby. I'll bet my double-barreled shotgun against your set of matched golf clubs that we don't get into any war by next election, and if you'll throw in your setter dog I'll make it election-after-next.

* * * *

Mostly the Congressmen do what constituents with typewriters tell 'em to do. That's because so many of 'em can't read handwriting without their specs. So if you want to influence Congress better borrow a typewriter.

* * * *

In response to your other question. Yes, I know who's going to be elected President, but I'm not saying, because nobody's going to make a monkey out of me. He'll be a real patriot, and his first year we'll wonder how we ever got along without him. Then we'll wonder why in thunder we ever elected him.

Yours.

Trade Treaty Fight Opens In Senate

Harrison Plans To Defend Program; Enemies Draw Lines

Advance skirmishing in the Administration's show-down battle to extend the trade agreements act opened in the Senate yesterday, as House and Senate minority leaders conceded House approval of a three-year extension.

With a Senate coalition uniting behind an opposition move to force Senate ratification of future agreements, Chairman Pat Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee, said he will take the Senate floor in a few days to defend the act.

Harrison, who declared himself "100 per cent behind Secretary Hull for extension," said he will present the Administration case to the Senate in advance of House action.

Hearings Open Tomrorow

House Ways and Means hearings will open tomorrow, with Hull the first witness, and the bill probably will be favorably reported to the House next week. Despite Republican opposition, a "safe" House majority for passage was claimed by House managers. Minority leaders said the "real fight" will come in the Senate.

Following a conference yesterday with Chairman Sabbath, of the House Rules Committee, President Roosevelt told reporters he hoped swift clearance will be given the legislation by the rules group after it is reported by the Ways and Means Committee.

Senate Republican opponents of the trade agreements act took a back seat yesterday, giving the driver's wheel in the fight on the law to Western Democrats opposing continuance of the trade agreements policy.

McCarran Estimates Strength

Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, who, with Senator Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, is active in the Western Democratic opposition to extension, claimed that from "25 to 35" Senate Democrats favor Senate ratification of agreements.

Previously, McCarran introduced a bill to require Senate ratification of agreements, on the same basis as treaties. Although Senate Republicans would prefer to kill the act they are expected to unite behind Western Democrats on a ratification substitute.

"Reciprocal trade agreements are treaties," said McCarran in a statement. "The State Department has so recognized, because it is only in treaties that the most-favored-nation clause applies.

"Inasmuch as the Senate has never been permitted to ratify the reciprocal trade agreements heretofore made, these agreements are void."

On Capitol Hill

REP. SABATH

Chairman Sabath, of the House Rules Committee, said yesterday after a conference with President Roosevelt that action on a resolution to continue the Dies Committee would be deferred until two Republican vacancies on the Rules Committee are filled.

An opponent of the move to continue the committee which investigated un-American activities, Sabath declared he believed Chairman Dies also should be heard from before the resolution is acted upon. Dies is ill in his Orange (Tex.) home.

Later Representative Dempsey (Democrat), of New Mexico, and a member of the committee, declared he was authorized to say "the President is not taking any interest in the matter, one way or the other." Representative Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, member of the Rules Committee, predicted hearings of the extension move would begin next Monday.

Sabath criticized the committee as he departed from the White House. He said of its investigation:

"In my opinion, it is money thrown away. The Justice Department has better organization than Dies can ever hope to set up and I see no use in duplicating the work. Dies has had enough publicity for any and all purposes."

Representative Kramer (Democrat), of California, said he had dropped for the time being any thought of asking Congress to investigate a reported plot to sabotage Boulder Dam.

Kramer said a talk with J. Edgar Hoover had convinced him that the Federal Bureau of Investigation "apparently has the situation well in hand."

Legislation to exempt all newspapers of 5,000 or less circulation from requirements of the wage and hour act has been proposed to Congress.

Senator Wiley (Republican), of Wisconsin, introduced a bill which would amend a section of the act which now exempts only weeklies or semiweeklies of less than 3,000 circulation.

The Texas delegation in the House sent letters to President Roosevelt expressing appreciation for the recent appointment of two Texans to the "little cabinet." Alvin J. Wirtz, of Austin, was nominated Undersecretary of the Interior, and Grover B. Hill, of Amarillo, was named Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

Boy Cured of Paralysis Spurs President's Ball Ticket Sales

Michael Savage, Sent to Warm Springs by Roosevelt, Now Plays Football and Takes Part In Other Sports as Pupil at Oyster School

President Roosevelt's little friend, 12-year-old Michael Savage, who recovered from infantile paralysis so well that he now plays football, called on members of the President's Birthday Committee yesterday to spur sale of tickets for the celebration.

A student at Oyster School, Michael is warm in his praise for the President, who made it possible for the youngster to take the cure at Warm Springs five years ago

Yesterday Michael walked into the office of Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal, who is handling sale of tickets. He looked like any other youth who enjoys baseball, sledding and double features. He was accompanied by his father, Howard P. Savage, who had been associated with the late Speaker Byrns.

Speaker Byrns told the President about the boy when he was afflicted and it was not long thereafter that Savage visited the White House and arrangements were made for the cure.

With pride Michael told the gathering yesterday how he welcomed the President at Warm Springs the Thanksgiving he was there. He only had to spend six months at the institution. For the last two years the boy has played halfback with the Devitt Playground football team, and he admits he can hold his own in tennis and golf. He also catches on the neighborhood baseball team.

After posing for pictures, Michael made a wish that this year's sales would be even larger than last year's so that others who, like himself, have been afflicted might be aided.

The Gallup Poll

WPA Unions Not Yet Accepted by Public, National Survey of Opinion Shows

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 9.—Despite the fact that most voters throughout the country have accepted the principle of labor unionism, a national survey of public opinion indicates that the majority have apparently not yet accepted the idea of unions among the unemployed workers on relief.

DR. GALLUP

In a press conference last month President Roosevelt expressed the opinion that while persons on relief had a right to organize into unions, they had no right to strike. To find the attitude of the public on this question, the American Institute of Public Opinion put before voters in a national survey the two issues posed by the President.

The results show that while the majority agree with the President in opposing relief strikes, they do not agree that relief workers have a right to organize into unions.

The specific questions in the national cross-section survey of the public were as follows:

"Should people on WPA be allowed to form WPA unions?"
Yes 21%
No 79
"Do you think people on WPA should have the right to strike?"
Yes 15%
No 85

Only one person in ten, on the average, expressed no opinion on these issues.

This vote does not mean, however, that labor unions in general are condemned; it is only the extension of unionism to relief workers that has not yet been accepted. For when, in a recent study, the Institute asked voters the general question: "Are you in favor of labor unions?" the replies were overwhelmingly (74 per cent) in the affirmative.

In this survey, as in every other, the Institute made a special analysis of the reasons given by voters for the opinions. The results are helpful in understanding why it is that the majority have not accepted relief unions or strikes by reliefers.

The voters, judging by their statements, regard the relief program as having an entirely different basis from ordinary labor in private industry and for that reason consider that union principles do not apply. Thus, the most frequent comments are that "WPA is a form of charity," that the "Government and the taxpayers are simply trying to take care of these men, and are not bargaining for labor the way an employer does." Others point out that relief is only a "temporary program," while a few argue that reliefers should be "grateful for what they get" and "shouldn't bite Santa Claus."

The minority of voters feel, however, that "relief workers have just as much right to protect themselves as anybody else," and that WPA unions are necessary to "avoid discrimination and to provide a channel for grievances and protests."

The issue of relief unions finds Democratic and Republican voters in substantial agreement, for the rank and file in both parties vote more than 8 to 2 against strikes by reliefers, and are opposed by almost the same majority to WPA unions.

Jackson Dinner Criticized by Landon, Austin

Sen. Nye Announces He Will Support Vandenberg for '40

Two Republican leaders, Alf M. Landon and Senator Austin, of Vermont, yesterday criticized the "partisan" character of the Jackson Day dinner here, and London declared President Roosevelt's address would "put a damper" on the national unity the President was said to desire.

In another political development, Senator Nye, of North Dakota, declared he would support Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, for the Republican Presidential nomination.

Landon declared at Topeka, Kans.: "If the President would just give the spirit of unity an opportunity to work in this country, it would be so helpful.

"Makes It Difficult"

"Instead he makes it difficult by his foxy way of hiding, playing with the third term proposition, the business of inviting three Republicans to this Democratic meeting and then getting up and expressing regret they didn't come.

"He knew they wouldn't attend the meeting when the invitations were issued. Those Republicans had no business there."

Here, Austin, one of the three Republicans invited to the dinner, commented:

"I was impressed by its partisan character. It seemed to appeal for a waiver of partisanship in behalf of an unstated political cause—a third term.

"The character of the meeting developed as I indicated it would in expressing my regrets."

Nye Praises Courage

Nye, saying he would not be a candidate for the Republican nomination, declared:

"Senator Vandenberg has a great degree of courage, a thing that is going to be most essential in these next four years.

"He has an understanding and an appreciation of human needs.

"He has a grand record as respects agricultural legislation that has been considered in Congress during the last dozen years."

The Republican National Committee announced that Senator Bridges, of New Hampshire, avowed candidate for the nomination, would leave here Friday to make three addresses next week in Missouri after first visiting Landon at Topeka.

On Monday he will speak at Kansas City on "The Issue Is Here," on Tuesday at Fulton, Mo., on "What Democracy Means," and on Wednesday at St. Louis on "Morality in Government."

Following a conference with the Philadelphia Democratic leader, John B. Kelly, President Roosevelt told his press conference they canvassed Pennsylvania politics from A to Z but said no conclusions had been reached.

Roosevelt Extends Greetings to Poland

Paris, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Polish Telegraph Agency announced today President Roosevelt had expressed hope "the new year will bring more happy days for the Polish nation" in an exchange of greetings with Wladyslaw Raczkiewicz, President of the Polish government in exile.

President Raczkiewicz in a New Year's message to Roosevelt sent wishes that "the American nation see a realization of the high principles of international morals and justice."

Roosevelt Rips Into Taft Budget-Balancing Plan

Only 8 Million Saved, He Says; G.O.P. Senator Has Ready Answer

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

The "handsome prize" for a plan to balance the budget will not be awarded to Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, President Roosevelt inferred yesterday.

He cited figures to show that the Republican Presidential candidate's five-point program offered in a Chicago speech Friday would save $8,000,000 out of an $8,424,000,000 budget.

Ready for reporters' questions on the subject at his press conference, the President commented on Taft's proposals with even-voiced sarcasm.

Referring to a memorandum prepared for him by his secretarial staff, Roosevelt reviewed, item by item, the agencies Taft listed for abolition.

He said Taft suggested doing away with such agencies as the Central Statistical Board and the National Resources Planning Board, which, in the long run, saved the Government a great deal of money.

Defends Maritime Labor Board

He said the Maritime Labor Board had saved money by settling numerous strikes and pointed out that public safety in large part and for many years had depended on the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics.

Another agency the Ohioan would abolish was the Bituminous Coal Commission, which the President said was now operating more successfully than at first and had brought some semblance of stability to the coal industry.

The State Department cultural relations division, on Taft's list for extinction, cost the tax payer all of $69,000, Roosevelt noted with mock alarm. He added that he expected its cost would be repaid many times over in increased trade with Latin-America.

The Electric Farm and Home Authority, the analysis continued, had operated at a profit since its organization; the U. S. Employes Compensation Commission serves as the workingmen's compensation board for Federal employes and puts $4,700,000 of its $5,000,000 budget into the compensation fund; the Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration is a relief agency and is supported by relief appropriations.

Taft Has Read Answer

As a coup de grace to the Ohioan's plan, Roosevelt pointed out that the Disaster Loan Corporation, on the Taft blacklist, spent most of its money in providing flood relief for Ohio citizens.

When told of the President's remarks, Taft said Roosevelt had only mentioned a few of the agencies he marked for abolition and that even the total savings in these, $8,000,000, "in New Deal style, he considers to be nothing."

"He says nothing of the 75,000 extra employes of the Department of Agriculture," Taft added, "of the extra $1,200,000,000 he has added to the Federal pay roll; of the saving of $375,000,000 which I point out could be effected in relief; or any of the more important items.

"The truth, of course, is that he does not want to balance the budget."

Additional Reorganization

In answer to another question, President Roosevelt said that $11,000,000 saved since last summer by his reorganization program, would be run up to a total of $25,000,000 by forthcoming additional inter-and-intradepartmental reorganization orders.

He explained that although the saving of money was a prime purpose of his reorganization program, the real saving accomplished was difficult to cite in money terms.

As an illustration, he explained that the new council of personnel administration, with a budget of $50,000 requested for the next fiscal year, would save the Government millions by effecting more scientific personnel procedures.

FBI Inquiry Turns To Fredericksburg; Letters Are Studied

Five days before his battered body was found in the snow at Fort Hunt, Va., Sidney M. Little, 29-year-old tobacco salesman, told an acquaintance, "I think I'm going to die," it was learned yesterday.

This development came as Federal investigators turned to Fredericksburg, Va., where the slain man lived since February, in their search for the slayer who left the body on the picnic ground at Fort Hunt, Va.

H. Hadjy, a Fredericksburg restaurant operator, who bought tobacco from Little, told a Post correspondent that he had talked with the salesman January 3. Little, he said, came into his store to pick up some tobacco coupons Hadjy had saved for a prize.

Little stood in the restaurant for a few minutes, talking and drinking a glass of beer, Hadjy said. While he appeared nervous, there was nothing in the conversation to lead up to his startling words, "I think I'm going to die."

Hadjy said he passed the statement off as a joke, replied "Let me know when you're going and I'll go along with you," and added that the conversation ended there.

While Justice Department officials continued to have "no comment" on the investigation, the agent in charge was reported to have left Washington late yesterday, planning to return today. In Fredericksburg, it was learned, Federal investigators were expected last night to follow up leads uncovered in an examination of Little's papers.

The G-men searched Little's room, in the home of Mrs. Fred Walker, at Fredericksburg and took away a cardboard box containing letters and photographs.

Vessel Seeking Pirate Gold Missing at Sea

By International News Service

San Francisco, Jan. 9.—Does a pirate's curse still protect the fabulous, almost legendary "loot of Lima" for which numerous treasure-hunting expeditions have combed Cocos Island?

Mariners and adventurers gave that question serious thought tonight after the San Francisco branch of the United States Hydrographic Office issued an appeal to all ships at sea to be on the lookout for the two-masted schooner Spendthrift.

Mysteriously missing somewhere in the South Pacific, members of the treasure-hunting expedition aboard the Spendthrift last week were reported successful in their quest for the famous Cocos Island treasure consisting of jewels, dubloons and pieces of eight.

Under command of Capt. Jack Harris, the Spendthrift sailed secretly from San Pedro last November.

Aboard were Capt. H. H. Davenport, head of the expedition; his wife, Bernice; Douglas H. Narron, and Charles and James Forbes, jr., brothers who are said to have inherited a time-worn parchment map which supposedly led the party to the treasure.

News that the party had located the treasure was accompanied by a report that they lacked the proper equipment to unearth their find.

Nothing has been heard from the expedition since. Presumably the Spendthrift sailed for Costa Rica, whence she was to proceed either to Panama or San Francisco to purchase the needed equipment. Shortly thereafter a heavy storm swept the area.

If the party has located the treasure, it has succeeded where countless other expeditions have failed since 1821, when Cocos Island was the rendezvous of pirates who were said to have buried their booty, but seldom to have retrieved it. With the failure of the numerous expeditions, a legend grew the treasure was protected by a pirate's curse.

In Pasadena awaiting word of the missing vessel are Mrs. Billy Harris, wife of the skipper, and her 4-year-old son.

Militia Quells Lynching Threat In Mississippi

Prentiss, Miss., Jan. 9 (AP).—A threat of lynch law subsided under guns of more than 100 National Guardsmen today after two colored men were returned to this rural county seat for arraignment on charges that they killed a former town marshal.

Troops armed with tear gas and riot guns brought Jerome Franklin and Hilton Fortenberry here from Jackson. Franklin had been held there since two mob attempts on his life were th /arted at nearby Columbia a few hours after the New Year's Day slaying of J. C. Sanford. Fortenberry was taken there after his arrest a few days later in Houston, Tex.

Former Mrs. Topping's Trysts Seem to Bore Second Wife

GLORIA BAKER TOPPING — HENRY J. TOPPING
As They Appeared Yesterday In Court

JANE SHADDUCK TOPPING

HAROLD MAYHEW

Aviator, Addressed by Scion's Name in Bedroom, Never Corrected Maid, Affidavit Says in Suit of Private Detective

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 9.—Evidence that the first wife of Henry J. Topping, jr., not only shared her bedchamber with another man but also allowed the servants to call him "Mr. Topping" was submitted today in Federal court in the presence of the apparently bored Mrs. Topping No. 2, the former Gloria Baker.

This effort to depict the first Mrs. Topping—the former Jayne Shadduck, actress-aviatrix—as an adulteress was made by counsel for Harold Mayhew, private detective set upon her trail in search of evidence for a divorce and who now contends that the young tin plate millionaire owes him more than $5,000 as a promised "bonus."

The second Mrs. Topping, the "Original Glamor Deb," handsomely turned out in a blue fox cape and a modish black dress, sighed with ennui, her eyes wearily searching the ceiling of the courtroom, as an affidavit from the first Mrs. Topping's maid, Josephine Thompson, was read by the detective's attorney.

Never Corrected the Maid

In this, the maid said:

"I served breakfast, luncheon and dinner to Mrs. (Jayne Shadduck) Topping and the man with her for a week. Mr. Cordova (an aviator put in the role of the "other man" both by the maid and Topping himself) never corrected me when I called him Mr. Topping, nor did Mrs. Topping.

"I saw Mrs. Topping and Cordova in bed together. They had covers over them . . . on many occasions Mrs. Topping and Cordova acted in an intimate manner. They kissed and hugged and called each other dear, darling, honey and so forth."

All this, the Mayhew side contended, occurred in an apartment at Hempstead, Long Island. An affidavit from George Bell, the apartment house superintendent, asserted that on "many occasions" he had seen Cordova leave "from 6 a. m. to 10 a. m."

Mayhew's counsel contended that Topping had promised Mayhew $5,000 extra for "bona fide evidence of adultery on her (the first Mrs. Topping's) part," and that he had delivered such evidence.

Resisting that contention, Chester Bordeau, one of the young millionaire's lawyers, told Federal Judge Clarence Galston that Topping would "never" have consented to a $75,000 settlement to the former wife if his counsel had had any notion that the affidavits were sufficient evidence. (It was the wife, not the husband, who eventually got the divorce.)

Topping and his mother, the socially prominent Mrs. Rhea Topping, of Greenwich, Conn., strongly took this view—that Mayhew had earned no bonus—and Judge Galston himself, reserving decision late in the day, indicated a similar feeling.

Topping Testifies

For, in stating that his ruling might be expected some time tomorrow, he remarked: "On the basis of proof of an expressed contract (in the matter of the bonus) the plaintiff has apparently failed to establish a case."

Topping himself, a somewhat rotund man of 26, who is heir to a $14,000,000 fortune, testified that he hired Mayhew to investigate Jayne Shadduck Topping after having "understood from several friends" that she was "committing adultery in a Hempstead apartment with an aviator named Cordova."

"I didn't ask how much the investigation would cost. Not a word was said about that."

The dowager Mrs. Topping insisted that she had thought from the beginning, and still thought, that the affidavits turned up by Mayhew were not sufficient for the purpose.

McNutt Orders Job-Insurance Inquiry in Ohio

Adminstrator Paul V. McNutt yesterday ordered the Social Security Board to investigate C. I. O. charges that maladministration last year by Director H. C. Atkinson of the Ohio Employment Compensation Bureau deprived jobless persons of $14,250,000 to which they were entitled.

The charges—called "deliberately false" and "grotesque" by Atkinson—were presented by John Owens, president of the Ohio Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Owens charged benefits paid in 1939 to unemployed workers totaled only $23,750,000, asserting "if benefits had been paid on the full-time week as they should have been, the unemployed workers would have received $38,000,000."

Franklin McDuffe, Dartmouth Poet, Kills Himself

Hanover, N. H., Jan. 9 (U.P.)—Franklin McDuffee, 41, poet and Dartmouth English professor, was found dead of monoxide poisoning in a garage here, Dartmouth College officials disclosed tonight.

Columbus Crew To Sail From Pacific Ports

Those of War Age To Seek Round-a-about Way to Avoid Capture

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Jan. 9.—All officers and crew members of the scuttled German liner Columbus of military age will be released from Ellis Island next Sunday and will be taken under guard to Pacific Coast ports, from which they will be permitted to sail on Japanese and other foreign ships, it was learned tonight.

Members of the Columbus' crew who are not of military age will be detained at Ellis Island until accommodations for them to sail from New York on neutral ships have been completed.

Of the 575 stranded seamen, more than 400 will start Sunday for the trip back home. The State Department reached a decision to release them, but no details were disclosed today in Washington. Officials in New York reported, however, that the seamen would begin their journey to California Sunday on buses and trains.

It was believed that the State Department's reason for not giving details was part of a policy to prevent the German sailors from being taken prisoners on the high seas by the British or French craft.

One of the seamen who will be sent to the Pacific Coast and thence to Germany is Kurt Hinsch, second officer of the Columbus, whose wife, Mrs. Lisselotte Hinsch, tried unsuccessfully today to obtain a court order directing immigration authorities to release her husband. Hinsch was brought to the court on a writ of habeas corpus obtained Monday from Judge Hulbert by Mrs. Hinsch.

A report, not confirmed, was that the seamen leaving the United States on Japanese ships eventually would reach Germany by way of the Trans-Siberian Railroad through the Soviet Union.

Dr. Hans Borchers, German consul general in New York, declined to discuss any details of the release of the seamen, who have been at Ellis Island since they were rescued by the United States cruiser Tuscaloosa and brought to New York on December 20.

Capt. Wilhelm Daehne, commander of the Columbus, scuttled and set fire to his ship on orders of Adolf Hitler when a British destroyer stopped the liner 450 miles due east of the entrance to Delaware bay.

Dr. Borchers said no names of ships on which the seamen would sail would be made public. He explained that it was possible if such information were given that some of the men might be taken off ships at sea and made prisoners of war.

Since the war began British and French warships have been stopping neutral vessels and taking off all Germans who might be of age to serve in the Nazi forces.

A Federal official said tonight that he understood that only members of the Columbus's crew under 17 and over 55 would be permitted to remain at Ellis Island, until they were sent to Europe or the mediterranean on neutral ships.

Maritime officials expressed belief that the British government had an agreement with Japan whereby no Japanese ships would be delayed or searched in the Pacific.

The passage of the seamen will be paid by the North German Lloyd Line, owner of the Columbus, it was understood. The line also will supply armed guards to prevent escape of any of the seamen wishing to remain in the United States with relatives. A fine of $1,000 would automatically be levied against the line for each member of the crew who escaped while in the United States.

Czech Shake-up Implied in Speech

Prague, Jan. 9 (AP).—Reports that a reconstruction of the Czech protectorate government is impending were given weight tonight by an anti-Jewish mass meeting addressed by Johann Rys who reproached the government for not solving the Jewish and social problems.

Rys, leadere of a right radical Czech opposition group avowedly friendly to Germany, charged the Unity Party—the only legal political organization in the protectorate—with being a "conglomeration of old political parties (of the republic)" and with "practicing a double game."

The meeting was sponsored by the Czech National Socialist movement.

Mrs. Roosevelt Asks Trash Cans of 'Interesting Design' for D. C.; Psychologist Complains of Those That Look Like Mail Boxes

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt yesterday breathed a mild reproach about the litter in the Capital's streets and lifted the lid on a minor tempest in a trash basket.

"I wish," she wrote in her column, "My Day" "we might be the cleanest, most orderly city in the world."

Quoting a California visitor, she referred to "dirty newspapers and crumpled bags blowing along the streets and lodged in corners." And she repeated the visitor's suggestion that the District "provide containers of interesting design" to stimulate the clean-up drive.

A hasty sampling of sentiment by The Post showed wide divergence of opinion on what qualities make a waste basket most enticing.

A George Washington University psychologist reported that it doesn't make any difference what size or shape the baskets are. "We just need more of them," he said. He complained, however, about the deceptive shape of the present containers.

"The other day," he said, "I opened a package and looked for a handy receptacle. All I could see was a mailbox on the corner. So I did the usual thing and fed the wrapper to the gutter. Imagine my embarrassment, when the mail box turned out to be a waste box."

He said he was deathly afraid to deposit letters in mail boxes now. "A street cleaner isn't the best type of mail collector, you know."

The city refuse supervisor, William A. Xanton, bewailed the fact that Washingtonians seem to prefer the sidewalks to any of the 550 waste baskets that litter the city's streets. He said that "everything from household garbage to dead cats seems to find its way into the containers—everything, that is, but pedestrian trash."

"We think," he said, "that our cans are better looking than most. The design is interesting enough for their purpose."

Asked about the scarcity of the species, he replied:

"We think it would be a little undignified to have a trash can on every corner of the Capital of the United States."

Other officials pointed out that for many years water wagons have been used to flush the city's streets in the wee hours. But even this practice has received its share of vituperation from the top hat and evening gown trade. One night club habitue complained:

"It isn't only the street that gets wet when one of those artificial rain makers comes ambling along."

George Harding, chief of the park maintenance division, revealed that the Interior Department embarked upon an experiment in trash containers several years ago. Concrete receptacles were built to look like hollow tree trunks and spread through Rock Creek Park. The "tree trunks" are still there, but now there are wire baskets in addition.

Harding said wire baskets were used because they were easier to handle, but the legend goes around that one civic-minded picnicker went slightly mad after a day's search for one of the cleverly camouflaged containers.

It is said he ended up chopping down trees to find out if they were hollow.

128-Yr.-Old House, Once a Wilderness Outpost, Is Razed

Middleburg, Md., Jan. 9 (AP).—A house built in 1812 as a wilderness outpost, straddling the Pennsylvania and Maryland State line, has been torn down.

The house belonged to Mrs. Maggie Burger, who lived there from October, 1884, until 1927, when she moved to Hagerstown.

The one-and-a-half-story house, built of oak and hickory logs, stands partly in Washington County, Md., and Franklin County, Pa.

Text of Prime Minister Chamberlain's Address at Lord Mayor's Luncheon

Federation of Europe Built on Alliance With France Foreseen

London, Jan. 9 (Via Radio).—The following is the text of Prime Minister Chamberlain's broadcast:

Before coming to the subject of my address this afternoon I should like, first of all, my Lord Mayor, to thank you very sincerely for the kind and appreciative words that you have said about my city. The burden of a prime minister in peace time has been enough to break up many of my predecessors.

In war time they are necessarily even more exacting. I had hoped that in my time, at any rate, war might have been averted. But since that day when war was declared, my sole thought and all my actions have been directed to one purpose only—namely, to do all I could in the closest conjunction with out stanchest French allies to bring this war to a successful conclusion. To that purpose, I have subordinated everything else, all thought of rest or relaxation; both casual affections, to use the words of a daily prayer in the House of Commons, and all personal feelings and considerations whatsoever.

Will Not Be Deflected

From that purpose, so long as I hold my present office, and until the war comes to an end, I will not be deflected. Nor will I shirk my inevitable responsibility in what I feel to be right no mattter how difficult or even disagreeable they may be.

My Lord Mayor, it seems appropriate that my first public utterance in this new year should be made here in the very heart of the empire which is every day gathering its strength to battle for the cause, which has united us all as we were never united before—the cause of liberty and justice for all mankind.

Once again, as 25 years ago, the historic buildings and the ancient streets of Britain are looking upon the faces of the King's subjects who are come here from all parts of the world of their own free will, far away from their homes and their families, to take their part side by side with us in the great struggle that is before us.

Their presence here, and the profound conviction of the necessity of putting an end to the German policy of constant aggression which alone could have induced them to undertake such sacrifices, has brought to the aid of the Allies not only a most welcome addition to their fighting strength but what is perhaps even more valuable, the moral support of their unanimous approval of our cause.

Calm Before the Storm

This new year, which will probably be a fateful one in the history of the world, has opened quietly, but it is the quiet of the calm before the storm. We are at war, and vast numbers of men, armed with the most powerful weapons of destruction that science can devise, are watching one another from behind their defenses. From time to time we hear the sound of guns, but as yet there is no general engagement.

We do not know how long that will last. In the air there is greater activity. There are individual combats which bear full witness to the gallantry and the daring of those young men who take part in them. There are daily reconnaissance far out over the sea into the enemy's territory or territorial waters, running the gantlet of fire from the ground or of aerial attacks, and those expeditions are a high test of courage and endurance. But in the air, as on the land, we know that what is happening is merely the preliminary to the main struggle.

It is only on the sea that the war may be said to be in full operation. And it is on the sea that we can discern most clearly the trend of hostilities in the first four months of the war.

Well, if we take a survey I think we shall find that the result is not unsatisfactory. The oceans of the world have been swept clear of German shipping. The German fleet, which at the beginning of the war was less than a quarter of our own, has lost by capture, by sinking, and, above all, by scuttling, 228,000 tons. And most of it is either bottled up in foreign ports or is confined to the Baltic.

Net Loss, 122,000 Tons

On the other side, attacks upon our fleet, which of course present much more extensive a target, whether by U-boat, by mine or by raider, have produced but meager results.

If we subtract from our losses by enemy action or by the ordinary marine casualties, our gains, by captures from the enemy, by new ships or by transfers from foreign flags, we have lost up to date 122,000 tons, less than 1 per cent of the merchant fleet that we possess. And every day, every day now, there are passing to and fro upon the several oceans of the world no less than 11,000,000 tons of British shipping. In this period we've lost two large warships, the Royal Oak and the Courageous, and a certain number of smaller vessels.

What is much more serious, more painful, is that we have also lost a number of valuable lives, in the royal navy, in the mercantile navy, in unarmed and defenseless commercial vessels.

And yet, ladies and gentlemen, our command of the seas is unimpaired and the defeat of the Graf Spee, in one of the finest naval actions in all our history, followed by her self-destruction rather than face a renewal of the fight, has not only cleared the South Atlantic of that raider but it has inflicted irreparable damage upon German naval prestige throughout the world.

Meantime, inexorable pressure of sea power acting upon the enemies is producing ever-increasing difficulties for her own economy and her ability to carry on the war. The net results are not yet strikingly visible, and you may be sure that every effort is being made to conceal them.

Nazi-Soviet Pact "Unholy"

You have only to read the Christmas orations of the German leaders to see that they are very present to their minds.

When I look forward beyond the boundaries of this country we cannot fail to observe how easily, how rapidly those evil things of which I have spoken before would spread unless they were checked. Germany used her brute force upon unhappy Poland. Today we can see how she's treating the Poles and the Czechs, exploiting their resources, carrying off their food, starving and shooting the people, tearing them and uprooting them from their homes in order to make way for Germans, who, in their turns, have been forced to leave the lands where they and their families have been settled for generations. And now it is the turn of Finland to be attacked by that power with whom Germany made an unholy pact and whom she set the example of aggression.

Finland today amidst her shows and her frozen lakes is fighting against the forces of unscrupulous violence just as we are, ourselves. She is fighting for the same things—for liberty and for justice—and her marvelous successes fill us with admiration for her heroism, whilst her need calls for our sympathy and our aid. That valiant people can rest assured that our response to that resolution which was passed so recently at a meeting of the League in Geneva will be no mere formality.

There is another country, another valued friend and to whom our sympathy goes out today, I mean Turkey. Turkey who is not at war, but who in a few days by floods and earthquakes has suffered more casualties than have been sustained in many weeks of war by all of the belligerents together. Even now we do not know the full extent of the calamity of which every account brings us fresh stories to illustrate the horrors of the situation. Under the personal direction of the President of the republic, everything possible is being done to carry relief to the scene of the disaster, and the Turks—those wonderful peasants—are taking their trials with that stoical courage which has ever been their national characteristic.

Allied Collaboration Permanent.

But naturally we, their friends, in the face of such a tragedy are anxious to give not merely our sympathy but our help. The British and the French governments have already contributed sums of money for the relief of the victims. They have, moreover, informed the Turkish government of their desire to give further assistance the form of which is now being considered by all three of us together.

You know, ladies and gentlemen, this collaboration between France and ourselves for humanitarian purposes is only just another instance of that close, that intimate association between us which now covers every aspect of the war—military, political, financial and economic. I can't help thinking that our experience of this association during the war will prove it to be so valuable that when the war is over, neither of us will want to give it up.

And it might even develop into something wider and deeper because there is nothing which would do more to facilitate the task of peaceful reconstruction which has got to be undertaken some time.

There is nothing which would contribute more toward the permanence of its results than the extension of Anglo-French collaboration in finance and economics to other nations in Europe and indeed perhaps of the whole world.

I was deeply sorry to see this morning that my friend and colleague, M. Daladier, had suffered an accident and I am sure everyone in this country will wish him a speedy recovery.

Draft Reserves Cited

In his last three speeches, which I hope have been widely read in this country, he has expressed with his usual clarity and eloquence the spirit of the French people, their determination to achieve the security which has been so long denied to them, their readiness to accept any hardship or any sacrifice that may be necessary in order to attain it, and their unanimity in the face of national danger.

I am confident that we in this country will not lag behind the French in our resolution or in our cheerful acceptance of the inevitable hardships of war.

Let me now turn for a moment to the home front. On the very first day of war, Parliament passed the national service armed forces act, which replaced the military training of last spring and which gave power to make liable for service by royal proclamation all men between the age limits of 18 and 41. Under the first and the second proclamations which took place in October and December, respectively, nearly 500,000 men were registered. This year, we began on the first day of it with a third proclamation which renders liable to service 1,900,000 men between the ages of 19 and 28; so that if you include the numbers who were registered last June under the military training act, some 240,000, we find that the total number of men, who, since the introduction of compulsory service have been registered or become liable to be called up under the proclamation, amounts to between 2,500,000 and 2,750,000.

And if you add to that those who are members of the regular reserve and auxiliary forces before the war, and the very large numbers of volunteers who entered the army since the war and the great and growing forces of the air force and the royal navy, it can't be denied that the mobilization of the manpower of this country for military purposes is already on a prodigious scale.

Then, a parallel with this development of our military forces, we have the great system of civil defense which has been built up by way of preparations against air raids. Day and night our fighter aircraft, our antiaircraft guns, our balloons, our observer corps, are mobilized and stand ready to detect and meet the raiders.

Then we have also the auxiliary firemen and police, the air raid wardens, the casualty services and all that great army of volunteers, most of them part-time, unpaid workers, who form a central part of our system of civil defense.

Then there are finally the safety measures which we have taken to diminish risks; evacuation, the blackout, the restrictions upon the hours of places of public entertainment, and all the complicated arrangements for casualties at first-aid posts and hospitals.

Those are vast preparations, and they have occasioned a good deal of hardship, inconvenience, loss of money, and I am afraid, loss of life, too, in street accidents. And then, after all, four months have gone by and the air raids have not come. Some people think it really is very disappointing. And it is perhaps not surprising that others should ask whether, after all, these preparations were necessary, and whether we have not gone a great deal too far in the direction of safety.

Child Evacuation Praised

Well, I wish I could take that view, but all I think I am going to say now about it is this: That whilst we have already reviewed all our different precautions, modified them where we thought we could do so without disregarding the important factor of safety, I do not consider that the risk of air raids is over, or even that it is diminished, and as long as that is so I am certain that we should make a capital mistake if we were to reverse the policy that we have hitherto followed, a policy which I might sum up in this way, by saying that it is evacuation, while evacuation can be carried on free from interruption of bombs or machine guns of all who can be evacuated, without the loss, the serious loss of efficiency.

And I must say I do regret that some of the evacuated children have returned to the towns, not only because they add to the problems which would arise if air raids began, but also because, thanks to the kindly spirit and the unselfish devotion of the dwellers in the country who have taken them in, they have very considerably benefited in health as is conclusively proved by their increase in height and weight.

And so I hope that, in general, parents will consider that it is in the interest of the children themselves that they should be left in the evacuation areas and that they will look upon the temporary separation of the family as one of those sacrifices which is necessary to win the war.

I don't believe that there is any people in the world who are more patriotic, more ready to sacrifice themselves for their country or for their principles than our own. I am certain that they are united in their determination to win this war and to put an end to the spirit which dominates German policy. What I am not quite so sure of is that they understand what they are up against, or that we shall have to face a phase of this war much grimmer than anything we have seen yet.

Arms Production Rising

If that be so, I am not blaming them. Perhaps it is because they have not been told enough about it; perhaps it is the fault of the government in general, and myself in particular. I might plead in mitigation that I have had a good many other things to occupy me which have made it difficult to resort to the platform. But at any rate, I have got an opportunity this afternoon, and I want to take it.

Well, briefly, then, my theme is this: We mustn't think because this war has not taken the form hitherto that it did in 1914, that we can carry on our lives as if we were still at peace. We have got to do without a lot of things that we shall miss very much, and I am going to try to show you what. Although we are not yet actually fighting on land, we are making preparations to enable us to do so with the greatest effect whenever the right moment comes, and for that purpose we are devoting more and more of our manpower to the production of armaments. That must mean that there is less and less of our manpower available to produce civilian goods. And you may say to me, "but, haven't we got a great army of unemployed? And why can't they be used to produce these goods?"

Well, my answer to that is, first of all, that the figures of unemployment are, to some extent at any rate, misleading. They include quite a large number of people, perhaps half a million, of those who are merely passing from one job to another.

And as to the rest, well, the situation is only temporary, because the great bulk of those who can be usefully so employed will gradually be absorbed as we go on extending the number of firms who are engaged upon armament work, while in the engineering industry alone, including in it aircraft or air engine factories, we shall want hundreds of thousands more.

Foresees Labor Shortage

It is already clear to us that the demand is going to be so great for labor that there will have to be an extensive change-over from one occupation to another. I am not concerned this afternoon with how that change-over is to take place. That is a matter which is being hammered out between employers and employed. And it is only to end in progress.

My point is that this demand for labor, for the purposes of armaments, is going to make it impossible for them at the same time to be producing civilian goods in the quantities which we have enjoyed hitherto. Even supposing we had ample supplies of labor, we should still have to curtail our imports of goods which are not necessary for the prosecution of the war in order to leave available our resources of foreign exchange and of shipping, to purchase and to bring home in ships the imports of those things that we cannot do without.

And it must be remembered that since our raw materials, like our foodstuffs, are only partly produced at home and have largely to be imported from overseas, and while we are making munitions on the present scale, we are adding enormously to the amount of imports which become necessary to us, and therefore adding more loads upon our shipping, and that shipping is bound to work more slowly in war than in peace because we have to employ the convoy system, and every now and then we have to alter the destination of these ships to unaccustomed ports.

Export Increase Urged

And then again, consider this, that, of course, all imports have to be paid for and that they can be paid for only in one of three ways, either in gold or by the sale of foreign securities or by the export of goods and services.

And there, since our supplies of gold and foreign securities are limited—and, mind you, we must keep reserves of these things in case this should prove to be a long war—since they are limited, as I say, we are driven back upon the exports, and we have therefore got, in order to cope with this situation, to increase our exports as much as we can and at the same time to diminish the imports of the things that we can do without.

Well, I don't believe that anybody who remains at home will complain of such sacrifices as this imposes upon him, when he thinks of the much greater sacrifices that are being made by those men who are today braving with such magnificent courage the perils and the hardships of war on the land or on the sea or in the air.

Barely a year ago, speaking in the House of Commons, I warned the country that it was the intention of his majesty's government at the outbreak of a major war, that direct taxes, which are already so heavy as almost to constitute conscription of wealth, would be still further increased. Well, that prediction was fulfilled when my heavy-handed colleague, last September, placed his little finger upon the shoulder of the income tax payer, and we have been getting at the income tax payer in other and more indirect ways, too.

Arms Profits to Be Small

Our system of tax collecting has gone a long way to prevent any unreasonable profits being made out of armaments, and if such profits, whether reasonable or unreasonable, could still be made out of, let us say, increased output, well, then, there seems little hope of profit in a good part of them.

And we passed the prices of goods bill, which is designed to prevent profiteering in commodities; and so, already the working classes have suffered a very heavy reduction in their income, and we have left them mighty little prospect of being able to increase it again.

I don't say that we have come to the end of our demands upon them, but I do say that their standards of living have necessarily already been notably reduced, and anyhow, it isn't possible for them alone to solve the problem of how to reduce consumption of unnecessary articles because two-thirds of the consumption of the people of this country is by those who only have small incomes; and therefore I say that it is necessary that they, too, should make their sacrifices as is done not only in totalitarian Germany but also in the great democracy of France.

I do not mean to imply by that that there must be no increase of wages, but I do say that it would be a mistake to tie up wages to the cost of living, which, in the end, could benefit no one, because it could only give an impetus to the vicious spiral of alternately rising prices and wages, and that is a thing that all of us want to avoid.

Rationing May Be Extended

I do not believe any competent authority upon economics would dispute the truth of what I have just said.

Well, then, what are we to do to win and if possible to shorten this war? We must save, we must control imports, we must do without commodities that are not necessary; we must, if required, ration them in order that all may share and share alike. And the campaign for national savings by the purchase of savings certificates and defense bonds has made an excellent start, and I welcome the readiness of the workers to take their share in it. I would like to see the volunteer workers in the campaign, but I want to ask them to redouble their efforts and to say to them that the service which they are rendering is one which is vital to the interests of the country.

Rationing began yesterday with certain articles of food, our supplies of which we draw largely from abroad. We are planning to add meat to the list before long, and while there is no reason to suppose that the country will have to go short of anything which is necessary for health or for efficiency, we shall not hesitate to add to the list of ration commodities if the necessity for that becomes apparent.

What the Government is trying to show is that in this democratic country, with the assent of the people, we can make and carry out all the plans which are necessary to win victory.

If we are to be able to preserve our standards which we have built up over so many years after the war, we must first win the victory and, to do that, we must be content for a time perhaps to accept temporary restrictions and controls which are imposed in the interests of us all.

Nazi Appetite Growing

Ladies and gentlemen, it is not easy to bring together all the factors that have to be considered by the government in these days. There is the maintenance and expansion of the fighting forces, there is the purchase of what we require overseas, and its transport in ships by the shortest routes; there is the development of our exports in order to pay for our imports; there is the stifling of German trade without undue interference with the neutrals; there is the control of production and of the import of unnecesary goods and luxuries; the regulation of prices; the avoidance of the vicious spiral—all these things have got to be taken into account and decisions have to be made in the light of that review.

What I want the country to realize, then, is that the war is going on every day, although in a form which is unfamiliar, and that every restriction which they are asked to accept is just one part of the general plan for securing the victory in the shortest possible time. Therefore, if you find that you can't buy the woolen goods that you have been accustomed to, well, remember that wool is wanted for the clothing of the army. If you are asked to lessen your consumption of bacon or sugar, remember that you are making available space in ships which can be used for iron ore or machine tools. If you are asked to put your surplus into saving certificates instead of spending it, remember that you are giving a helping hand to the chancellor in his herculean task of finding the wherewithal to pay for unprecedented expenditure upon munitions.

In these time of trial, we cannot guarantee, no one can guarantee, that the sacrifices of war are going to be equal; but if each one makes the sacrifices as the call comes to him, his own conscience will be clear and our combined efforts will see us through.

I have now only a few more words to say. It is becoming increasingly clear that the German government had long planned the successive stages of a program of conquest, and that its appetite grows by what it feeds upon.

Roosevelt Stand Cited

Today, the members of that government do not hesitate to say that they desire to achieve the ruin of the British Empire, and no doubt they would rejoice if they could treat us as they are treating the victims who are already within their grip.

We on our side have no such vindictive designs. To put it about that our desire is the annihilation of the German people is a fantastic and malicious invention, which can only be put forward for home consumption. But on the other hand, the German people must realize that the responsibility for the prolongation of this war and all the suffering that it may bring in the coming year is theirs, as well as that of the tyrant who stands over them. They must realize that the desire of the allies for a social, humane, just, Christian settlement cannot be satisfied by assurances which experience has proved to be worthless.

The methods that are pursued by the government of Hitler are a standing threat to the independence of every small state in Europe. They are a constant menace to the moral standards on which the whole of western civilization is founded. Nowhere have they aroused greater detestation than throughout the continents of North and South America.

In his recent mesage of the Pope, the President of the United States declared that only by friendly association by the seekers of light and seekers of peace everywhere, could the forces of evil be overcome. I profoundly agree. But I would like to add that if the forces of right are to prevail, we must not hesitate to risk our blood and our treasure to so great an end.

In our determination to achieve our purpose, we are united among ourselves. We are supported by the peoples of the empire, by the power and resolution of our great and gallant ally, France; by the moral approval of all who realize that the fate of civilization is bound up with our success. Against such a combination as that, the powers of wickedness will fight in vain, and we at the beginning of the new year can await the future with unshaken confidence in the strength of our arms and in the righteousnes of our cause.

Grim War Coming, Says Chamberlain

theirs, as well as that of the tyrant who stands over them." He said, however, that the idea that Britain wants to "annihilate" the German people was a "fantastic and malicious invention."

He "profoundly" agreed with President Roosevelt's message to the Pope in which Mr. Roosevelt said the forces of evil could be overcome only by friendly association by the seekers of light and peace everywhere. But, he added: "If the forces of right are to prevail, we must not hesitate to risk our blood and our treasure to so great an end."

Foresees U. S. of Europe

The prime minister for the first time touched on the idea of a United States of Europe, a political dream since the time of Napoleon and already hinted at by French Premier Daladier.

The present military, political, economic and financial cooperation between France and Great Britain, he said, "might even develop into something wider and deeper because there is nothing which would do more to facilitate the task of peaceful reconstruction which has got to be taken sometime; there is nothing which would contribute more toward the permanence of its results than the extension of Anglo-French collaboration in finance and economics to other nations in Europe and indeed perhaps of the whole world."

He suggested Britain and France were finding their alliance "so valuable that when the war is over neither of us will want to give it up."

Pledges Aid to Finns

Little Finland, he said, was fighting "against the forces of unscrupulous violence, just as we are, ourselves."

He promised that Britain's aid to Finland, pledged through the League of Nations, "will be no mere formality."

Much of Chamberlain's 55-minute speech, broadcast to the United States and many other parts of the world, was devoted to a report on the progress of the war and warnings of the struggle that must come.

Land and air events so far he described as "merely preliminary" to the real conflict. He found the sea the only place where he could say war was "in full operation," and he termed Britain's progress there "not unsatisfactory."

By capture, sinking "and above all, scuttling," he said the German fleet, which at the beginning of the war was less than a quarter of Britain's, had lost 228,000 tons. Most of it, he went on, was bottled up in the Baltic or in foreign ports.

Submarine, mine and raider attacks on Britain's merchant fleet, he declared, had produced only "meager results." The net British loss he put at 122,000 tons. He arrived at this figure by subtracting "from our losses by enemy action or by the ordinary marine casualties our gains, from captures from the enemy, by new ships or by transfers from foreign flags."

This 122,000 tons, he said, was less than 1 per cent of the British merchant fleet. He continued:

"And every day, every day, now, there are passing to and fro upon the several oceans of the world no less than 11,000,000 tons of British shipping."

Chamberlain placed against the loss of the battleship Royal Oak and the aircraft carrier Courageous the defeat and later self-destruction of the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee which, he said, "not only cleared the South Atlantic of that raider but has inflicted irreparable damage upon German naval prestige throughout the world."

Paris Writer Asks Blockade Of Murmansk

Allied Naval Action Against Soviet Oil Wells Also Urged

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Jan. 8.—he military expert of Le Temps, discussing possible means of outright Allied aid to Finland, today proposed a dual operation which, he argued, would offer great advantages, with virtually no risks.

His plan envisioned a blockade of Russia's Arctic port of Murmansk, and naval action in the Black Sea designed to divest Russia of her Caucasian oil wells. The Black Sea action, he asserted, would also cut off Germany from her Soviet oil supplies and would eventually halt the flow of Rumanian oil to the Reich.

Tantamount to War

All these actions, and each one separately, would of course be tantamount to war with Russia, but Le Temps' writer says, now is the time to examine the consequences of such "in the near future to swing the decision in Finland to the side of justice and right."

Le Temps' expert sees a naval action again Murmansk as the first step. This, he says, would not only prevent the Germans from using the port as a naval base, but also stop the Russians from reinforcing their Lapland troops.

"Then Franco-British land forces, few, but well trained and equipped for an Arctic campaign, could land not far from Petsamo and co-ordinate their efforts with those of the Finns to chase the Reds out of the region."

The results of this action would be, at little cost, to clear the Arctic region, and permit the movement of supplies to the Finnish army over the excellent Petsamo-Kemi highway.

Action in Black Sea

To divert the Russians from sending too many reinforcements to the Karelian front, a Black Sea naval action is advocated.

Anglo-French naval units could easily become masters of this sea, it is argued, and "intercept all oil shipments to Germany through Constantinople and the mouth of the Danube.

"These squadrons would also be able to help Rumania defend herself against Russian aggression on Bessarabia, because they would have Odessa under their fire.

"Moscow would be obliged to keep important forces in the Caucasus to protect her oil wells, without which the Russian populations would soon starve to death in view of the fact the Soviet agriculture is entirely dependent on automobile tractors. The Allied fleet would also bring encouragement to all states bordering on the Black Sea, which might produce far-reaching consequences."

The military expert concludes that these actions would cost no more than a few battleships and cruisers and a small number of landing troops "to co-operate in conjunction with the armies of certain friendly powers."

Chinese Give Funds To Turk Quake Victims

Chungking (Wednesday), Jan. 10 (AP).—The Federated Chinese Charities announced through Finance Minister H. H. Kung today that it is donating 50,000 Chinese dollars (about $3,750) to the Turkish Minister, Emin Sipahi, for relief of Turkish earthquake victims.

Fight on Arming Guam Renewed

American battleships, but will carry only nine 16-inch guns.

"Next year," he added, "we may drop the speed to 27½ and increase the gun power; put on a dozen of the 16-inch guns. That may add 5,000 to 7,000 tons."

Admiral Stark also revealed that the Navy is experimenting with an 18-inch gun, 2 inches larger than those in any army or navy of the world. A 16-inch gun has been rebored to the larger size, he said, and now is under test.

The Navy soon will have a fleet of 650 large flying boats, with a radius of action varying from 3,500 to 5,000 miles, the admiral declared. A total of 250 are in service, he said, and 200 more of the same type are on order, while purchase of an additional 200 of more advanced design is contemplated.

Announcement of plans for improvements at Guam brought forward both proponents and opponents of the project killed last year after a bitter fight in the House.

Then, as now, the actual proposal at issue was only for harbor improvements at the island, which is but 1,350 miles from Japan. But those who fought the move contended it was the opening step toward fortification of the island, as recommended by a recent naval board. They contend it would be a threat toward Japan.

Admiral Stark emphasized that the new proposal did not include any fortifications but argued that a strang base there would be of great advantage to the United States. To make Guam impregnable would cost $250,000,000, officials stated, while for about $100,000,000, it could be made into a "tough nut

If the proposed present improvement are carried out, anti-aircraft and coast guns established, warplanes and some 20,000 Marines based on the island, it would be equal to "adding two or three battleships to the fleet" Stark said.

Chairman Vinson declared no authority existed for asking appropriations at Guam and said he would make a point of order if it is recommended by the House Naval Appropriations subcommittee.

Chairman Scrugham, of the latter group, held the proposal was proper and said he would support it, though he is opposed to fortifying the island.

Representative Maas, ranking minority member of the House Naval Affairs Committee, agreed with Scrugham as to legality of the move and urged establishment of an "impregnable base" at Guam.

Authority for the move, officials explained, comes from an authorization for work in the Fourteenth Naval District, to which Guam was transferred for construction purposes by Presidential order in October.

Questioned regarding worth of the "suicide" German pocket battleship, Admiral Graf Spee, and its sister ships still in operation, Admiral Stark declared the former, "while a splendid ship, wound up where a lot of us thought she would." He termed the vessel "soft" and not armored against 8-inch gun shells.

Two older American battleships, the New York and Texas, he also termed vulnerable to 8-inch gun cruiser attack because of lower range of their heavier guns. He said the Navy soon will ask immediate elevation of the two-ships' batteries.

Deputies Oust 4 Communist Members

4 of 7 Fail to Rise In French Chamber Tribute to Army

By the Associated Press

Paris, Jan. 9.—France's Chamber of Deputies today inaugurated its first ordinary wartime session by throwing out four Communists amidst an uproar over the presence of former members of the outlawed party.

Tumult over seven Communists, whose party was banned shortly after the war's start, developed when four of their number failed to rise with the rest of the chamber in tribute to the army by Georges Levy-Alphandery, dean of the chamber.

Levy-Alphandery interrupted his opening address to propose expulsion of the four for their "scandalous attitude." By a show of hands the chamber adopted the proposal.

The government subsequently moved to strip the seven deputies, all that remain of the 72 who once sat for the party, of all their powers.

A communique announced that a government bill would be presented Parliament Thursday providing "disqualification of representatives who have not repudiated their solidarity with the former political party dissolved for connivances abroad."

In today's uproar, which lasted more than an hour, fists flew among the Communists and the rightists who objected to their presence.

The former members of the outlawed party some in uniform, had come to Paris on army leave. Other erstwhile party leaders are in prison for trying to resurrect their organization.

Ushers finally expelled the combatants and the chamber session was resumed with the members chanting the "Marseillaise." Levy-Alphandery's speech was punctuated frequently by cheers for the French army, Great Britain and Finland.

The chamber elected officers for the 1940 session, renaming Edouard Herriot president.

Chamber debate on war policies starts Thursday.

A letter from Premier Daladier was read in the lower house apologizing for his inability to attend because of a foot injury. This also caused postponement of a cabinet session.

The premier's injury was announced yesterday, but how it happened was not disclosed.

U. S. Will Send Naval Attache To Scandinavia

The United States soon will send a naval attache to Finland, Sweden, Denmark and Norway, it was revealed yesterday, replacing an arrangement whereby the Baltic countries were handled by the attache in Berlin.

An attache will be placed at Trujillo City, Santo Domingo, and at Bangkok, Thailand, formerly Fiam.

Discuss Taylor's Appointment

Among representatives of four Protestant church organizations who conferred with President Roosevelt yesterday about his appointment of Myron C. Taylor to be his personal representative to the Vatican were Dr. Rufus W. Weaver (left), chairman of the committee on public relations of the Northern and Southern Baptist Convention, and Dr. E. Hilton Jackson, attorney for the Baptists of America. Dr. Weaver, as spokesman for the group, said the President had "approved our opinion" that church and state should remain separate

The churchmen, on the other hand, informed the President of protests coming from their own membership against his appointment of Myron C. Taylor as his personal emissary to the Vatican.

Besides Dr. Weaver, those attending were: Dr. William S. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, representing the northern Baptist convention; J. L. McElhany, president, and E. D. Dick, secretary of the General Conference of Seventh-Day Adventists; Rev. Frederick H. Knubel, New York, president of United Lutheran Church of America; Dr. Ralph Long, New York, secretary of the Lutheran World Council, and E. Hilton Jackson, attorney for the Northern and Southeran Baptist convention.

These organizations have protested that the appointment of Taylor as the President's personal representative to the Vatican to work for peace was contrary to the principle that the church and state remain separate.

Asked whether members of the group had changed their minds on this point, Dr. Weaver said he would defer any statement in this regard until after the President himself had spoken.

Asked at his press conference whether the callers had registered protests, Mr. Roosevelt said they had informed him of protests by some of their constituents. These protests, however, he declared, were based on misinformation. The church leaders who called on him he intimated, made no protest themselves. They understand the situation, he declared, as does everyone else.

President Studies Extension Of American Aid to Finns

Question Discussed With State Department, Reporters Told; Loan of $60,000,000 Proposed in Congress

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt said yesterday he was talking over with the State Department the question of further American aid to Finland.

Reporters reminded him of proposals in Congress for loans of $60,000,000 to the Finns and for making the new Garand Army rifle available to them. Asked whether he had anything to say, the Chief Executive said not now, but that probably he would have something next week. In other words, he said, he was talking it over with the State Department.

Hull Indicates Backing

Credits of $10,000,000 for the purchase of non-military goods have been arranged for the Finnish government through the Export-Import Bank.

Representative Dingell (Democrat), of Michigan, after a conference with Secretary of State Hull, said last night he was confident that legislation proposing an unrestricted $60,000,000 loan to Finland would receive a favorable report from the State Department.

"The Secretary indicated a willingness to give an official opinion on the bill introduced by Representative Hook (Democrat), of Michigan, if and when the House Ways and Means Committee officially requests it," Dingell said.

"I imagine the committee will make its official request in a day or two."

Randolph Thanked

Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, made public a letter from the President in which the latter promised to keep in mind Randolph's opinion that this country should sever relations with Russia.

"I wish to thank you," the President wrote, "for bringing to my attention your views on this important subject.

"I can assure you that I shall bear them in mind whenever the various problems arising out of our relations with the Soviet Union are under consideration."

The President's letter was dated December 11.

Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, yesterday introduced a bill that would authorize a $10,000,000 apporpriation for distressed Polish women and children. Fish said the grant is necessary to prevent starvation.

Finn League Delegate Lauds U. S. Aid

Plea for 'Practical' Aid From Member Nations 'Realized,' He Says

By the Associated Press

Geneva, Jan. 9.—Rudolf Holsti, Finland's League of Nations representative, said tonight Finland's plea to the League "for practical help—not words" in her war with Russia was being realized.

"Finland now knows its faith in the league was not misplaced," Holsti declared. "Aid comes now not only in words and resolutions but also in planes, guns and ammunition to fight the aggressor and medical supplies to heal the wounded."

"The world only will know how much help we are receiving when our war is ended," he said.

Holsti, singled out the United States for special praise in lauding "aid hich comes to us from outside the league where the United States, motivated by the same ideals and its own ideals, has come to our aid when we need it most."

Informed sources disclosed that representatives of the various states helping the Finns had agreed on a "chain system" of speeding help.

Whenever possible, help promised the Finns in medical supplies, food and munitions is sent from supplies in Sweden and Norway. The Swedish and Norwegian stocks then are built up by shipments from the country originally offering the aid.

The chain system cuts to days delivery of goods which might normally take weeks.

Brazil, not a league member, was the latest nation to inform league officials she would help Finland. The Brazilian government said it would "lend all its prestige to any private initiative for assisting Finland."

Hoover Aid Now $500,000

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—Herbert Hoover, national chairman of the Finnish relief fund, announced today the transfer of another $100,000 to Finland, bringing the total to $500,000.

Hoover said the problem of providing adequate clothing and food for homeless civilians in Finland "is becoming very serious" with the severe weather in that country.

U. S. Buying Wigs At Boom Level From Paris Firms

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Jan. 9.—Unusually large orders from the United States for Parisian wigs has caused a welcome boom in the wig-making industry here.

Why the United States should choose this time to stock up in wigs is a question that baffles local manufacturers.

The speculations on the cause of this unexpected prosperity range from the facetious one that Americans are tearing their hair out over the European war to the more reasonable one that they are hoarding against a prospective shortage now that the Polish and central European markets for raw material—human hair—are cut off.

There have even been some surmises that arbiters of American fashions are trying to start a new fad for wigs.

Russia Admits Retreat Before Finns

forced back to Salla also, and the reunited columns dug themselves in

The Russian force, believed to number in excess of the 617,000 which makes up the average Red Army division, is virtually cut off from its base at Kandalalska, on the Murmansk-Leningrad railway.

Finnish patrols constantly have interrupted the flow of supplies, and are even reported to have surrounded the Russians completely.

The next few days may tell the story of whether the Red Army command has been able to bring up enough supplies to support the troops at Salla.

Three Forces Checked

In the beginning the Red Army sent three forces into the north. The first two were pressed toward Rovaniemi and the Swedish border and the other across Central Finland with the intention of splitting the country roughtly into two equal parts.

After six weeks of fighting the northern column, which passed through Petsamo, near the Arctic Sea, is checked where the great Arctic highway crosses the Kaskamo Mountains, south of Petsamo, and at Lake Pitka. It advanced barely 40 miles down from the Arctic coast.

The central column is now checked and in great danger at Salla, 35 miles from the Russian border and 150 miles from its objectives. The southern column has been driven back after suffering one of the worst defeats of the war in successive battles east of Suomussalmi.

Escaped soldiers from the 163d division which was beaten in the carnage at Suomussalmi, December 20, reportedly have reached other Russian detachments and informed them about the terrible Finns. When the Forty-fourth division suddenly found themselves encircled, the Russians, who lacked adequate supplies, became panic stricken, threw down their arms and ran "for life."

The victory is significant as the Forty-fourth division had not yet been in any serious encounter with the Finns. Its defeat undoubtedly will further weaken he morale of the Russian armies on the east front. In the days just ahead thousands of Russians may die of hunger and cold in the desolate woodlands. The victory has stiffened Finnish morale.

Altogether between 10,000 and 15,000 Red soldiers were said unofficially to be retreating over perilous terrain toward the Russian border.

President Kyosti Kallio, receiving the foreign press at the presidential palace, said he hoped "to draw attention to the inhuman treatment by the Soviet Union of our civilian population behind the front."

The Russians, he said, in the first month of the war bombed about 100 localities; dropping nearly 4,000 bombs, killing 234 civilians, seriously injuring 269 and slightly injuring 210.

Hore-Belisha Overridden On Air Chief

War Cabinet Decided Against Army Control Of R. A. F. in France

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 9.—An official communique tonight disclosed that a majority of the war cabinet, apparently overriding Leslie Hore-Belisha, then war minister, had decided early in December to place Royal Air Force units in France under the command of a single air force officer.

Hore-Belisha is reported unofficially to have favored army control of these R. A. F. units.

The communique disclosed that Air Marshal Arthur S. Barratt had been appointed air officer commanding in chief in France. He was made responsible, "in consultation" with British army commanders in chief on the spot and with French air commanders, for insuring the most effective support both of the British and French armies by the R. A. F.

Air Marshal Barratt will be answerable, however, only to the air ministry in London.

The communique said the arrangement meant that there was no change in the present relationship between army and R. A. F., which in Britain are separate armed services.

Ascendant in the war cabinet meantime, is Winston Churchill. Sources close to the government indicate his appointment as head of a new ministry of defense may be expected.

Trustworthy military sources likewise cast a new slant on Hore-Belisha's resignation. Instead of a row with the army "old guard," they insisted, the whole thing began in a recent secret session of Parliament itself.

Berlin Says Victims Armed

Berlin's account of today's raids said that German planes, scouting along the English and Scottish eastern coast, attacked and destroyed "several armed" naval patrol ships and merchant vessels they were convoying. The German planes all returned safely it was said.

German military sources challenged a British statement today that only two British ships, the steamer Box Hill and the trawler Eb, had been lost in the first week of the new year. The Germans said they had sunk at least six British ships with a total tonnage of 36,133.

The admiralty announced British warships had convoyed 5,911 allied and neutral ships since start of the war, with loss of only 12 by enemy action.

Shipping fared better in the first week of 1940 than in any other previous week of the war, the admiralty said. In addition to the two British ships, both sunk by mines, three neutral ships, one Norwegian and two Swedish, were lost.

Tokyo Cabinet Faces Crisis in Diet Meeting

Abe Is Held Unlikely To Be Premier When Diet Reconvenes

Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, Jan. 9.—The Japanese cabinet is facing an extremely delicate domestic situation, and it is doubtful whether Premier Nobuyuki Abe will still be premier when the Diet reopens on January 20.

The premier is ready to meet the parliamentary challenge of a vote of confidence and wants to retain the office unless the army definitely advises him otherwise. It is understood that Gen. Shunroku Hata, minister of war, who represents the army, has recommended caution, but has not yet announced his final opinion. Consultations are still going on.

The essential factor in the situation is the army's attitude. Party leaders could certainly prevent a vote of censure by obtaining a majority but they cannot prevent damaging oratorical attacks which would resound throughout the country. Premier Abe is prepared to take those risks, but the army seems to be alarmed at the prospect of vital national policies being entrusted to an unpopular administration that is facing an angry, excitable house.

Army Sets Policy

The army is not hostile to the cabinet, but the army sets the policy of the nation with respect to China, and it is responsible for this policy above any cabinet.

The party leaders will certainly agree to cooperate with Premier Abe on his foreign policies, including the supremely important China policy, yet they cannot guarantee him against attacks on minor questions which may be politically fatal.

At the cabinet meeting, Foreign Minister Nomura reported satisfactory progress in his policies aimed at the amelioration of Japan's relations with the United States and Russia. According to he Tokyo Asahi, he stated that American assurances protected Japanese trade against the risks of discriminatory treatment, and that therefore trade would continue normally after the expiration of the American trade treaty later in January.

Italy Backs Pledge to Hungary With Planes

grant permission for Italian troops to cross Croatia in order to aid Hungary. Yugoslavia is very friendly, both to Italy and Hungary, but Pan-Slavist sentiments of a majority of the population would be offended if such passage were granted to combat the Russians.

Belgrade Kept Advised

It can be taken for granted that both Rome and Budapest are in the closest touch with Belgrade, particularly in view of the fact that Germany held up shipments of Italian planes to Finland, which proves that Italy could not hope to aid Hungary against Russia by sending anything through Germany.

There is little reason to suspect, however, that Ciano and Csaky talked over a tri-partite Adriatic accord. Italy and Hungary like the idea, but Yugoslavia could not join without breaking up the Balkan Entente so long as an open difference exists between Rumania and Hungary. The Entente meets within a few weeks and will discuss some of these questions.

However, an Italian guarantee to Hungary would not be an unusual development but rather a crystallization of present tendencies. Italo-Hungarian

The entente has been convoked to meet at Belgrade on February 2, 3 and 4, and probably will discuss some of these questions. In addition to Yugoslavia and Rumania, members of the entente are Turkey and Greece.

German Invasion Unlikely

Hungary's sole binding alliance is a mutual consultation pact with Italy. Hungary and Italy are both still members of the Anti-Comintern pact, and Hungary is determined to defend her Carpathian frontier against the threatening Soviet.

Germany does not appear at the moment to be thinking of invading this part of the world, and there are some indications the Soviets might.

Csaky Reports to Teleki

Budapest, Jan. 9 (AP).—Foreign observers tonight asserted the reputed defensive alliance between Hungary and Italy probably would compel Germany to make an unwilling choice between continued friendship with these two powers and Russia.

While reports indicated the alliance provided for Italy to come to the aid of Hungary in the event of an invasion by either Germany or Russia, informed sources said it was directed mainly against Russia.

Foreign Minister Count Csaky hurried directly from the station today to Premier Count Teleki and his ministers to report on his negotiations.

Afterward Teleki and Csaky went to the palace for an audience with Hungary's regent, Admiral Nicholas Horthy. Informed sources said both Horthy and the cabinet welcomed the reported alliance.

Observers Watch Berlin

Observers closely watched Berlin, where Adolf Hitler was said to be consulting his advisers on how to reconcile Russian friendship and Nazi ties with Hungary and Italy.

Should Hitler decide to sign a military alliance with Russia, competent circles in Budapest said, he probably could not avoid an open break with Hungary and Italy.

The newspaper Magyar Nemzet declared:

"Before the German-Soviet game becomes definite Rome wishes to assure herself of certain positions. For that she has the support of Hungary.

"In case of a German-Soviet military alliance, Italy and Hungary would face a completely new situation which might force them in their own interests to take a definite position."

Carol to Be Pressed

Authoritative sources said the Italian and Hungarian foreign ministers had agreed to offer to help Rumania against a possible Russian invasion in return for a settlement of Hungary's demands on Rumania's Transylvania—which was Hungarian before the World War. Ciano was said to have urged Hungary not to seek a settlement of this issue by force.

These sources said King Carol of Rumania would be pressed for a definite reply to this offer.

In Rome, the Fascist press published reports Rumanian Foreign Minister Gafencu might visit Rome, presumably to discuss the prospect of settling Hungary's claim of Transylvania.

New Ministers Expected

Rome, Jan. 9 (AP).—Diplomatic circles heard today that new ministers to Bulgaria and Yugoslavia would be appointed to further Premier Mussolini's policy of warding off the danger of war in the Balkans by aiding amicable settlement of territorial disputes.

Reports were that Count Massimo Magistrati, counselor of the Berlin Embassy for the past three years, would be named minister to Bulgaria, and that Francesco Mamelo, minister to Portugal, might be appointed envoy to Yugoslavia.

85th Anniversary

MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

of the District of Columbia

In commemoration of the completion of Eighty-five years' service we are pleased to submit these brief facts:

Chartered by Congress

The Company has operated by a special Charter, approved by President Franklin Pierce, January 10, 1855. The incorporators were Ulysses Ward, Thomas Blagden, F. Howard, J. C. McKelden, John Van Riswick, P. W. Browning and Matthew G. Emery.
On April 16, 1934, President Franklin D. Roosevelt approved certain amendments to the Charter, "modernizing" the plan of operation. An important change authorized the issuing of non-assessable policies.

Motive and Objective of Company

Ulysses Ward, the first President, declared: "The motive which prompted the effort to bring this Company into existence and maintain and perpetuate it was unselfish other than a desire to be instrumental in conferring great and lasting good to the people of the District of Columbia for all time to come." Successive years of operation has fully demonstrated the soundness of the motive outlined by Mr. Ward, and that the Company has indeed been a saving institution for its policyholders.

A Policyholders' Company

The Company has been and is being operated by and for its policyholders. Hundreds of thousands of dollars of the savings have been returned to them, materially reducing the cost of their insurance. Other thousands have been paid for their losses.

Company Appreciated by Policyholders

Believing in the sound principles of Mutual Insurance, and having faith in our Company, the helpful cooperation of the policyholders has largely contributed to the success attained by the Company. Their endorsement and recommendation of the Company to friends has greatly helped in the upbuilding of the Company.
The Company extends its appreciation to the trust companies, building associations, and others for their acceptance of our policies in connection with mortgage loans, and in handling of estates of deceased policyholders. They know their clients Save when insured by our Company.

A Record of Achievement

Age of an institution indicates success and with success comes soundness and financial stability. Our Company has met every demand of its policyholders for incurred losses and has steadily built a structure of assets to meet heavy, unexpected demands. An enviable record has been established for prompt and equitable adjustment of losses.

A Promise for the Future

And now, at the beginning of a new year, the management, proud of the long years and past service rendered by the Company, promises the policyholders, present and prospective, continued sound insurance practice, continued low cost of operation, and continued return of such savings (dividends) as may be deemed prudent to produce low-cost insurance, a main objective of the Company.

A Word to Insurers

Everyone having insurable property in the District and vicinity should consult our locally owned and managed Company regarding their insurance needs. No assessment liability, and only non-assessable policies issued. We insure against the perils of fire, windstorm, hail, explosion, aircraft, vehicles, smoke damage due to faulty oil burners, and riot.

Bank Accuses Treasury of Persecution

Giannini Threatens To Put Institution Into State System

L. M. Giannini, president of the Bank of America, large Pacific Coast national bank, threatened yesterday to convert the bank into a State institution unless Secretary of the Treasury, Morgenthau ceases his "antagonism" toward the bank's management.

Giannini, according to a United Press dispatch from San Francisco, charged Morgenthau had been "persecuting" him and other Bank of America officials.

"If these abuses don't quit," he said, "I'll ask the stockholders to convert our organization into the State banking system. It is not necessary that we belong to the Federal system."

Treasury Is Silent

While Treasury officials last night declined to comment on Giannini's statement, the Treasury's attitude, it is understood, is that it will proceed quietly with the supervision of the bank as in the past.

There have been reports at various times that the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, which is charged with the regulation of national banks, might bring into the open its long undercover fight with the Bank of America and the Giannini banking empire generally. It is expected this will not be the case.

In order for Bank of America to "convert" into a State institution, however, a bank will have to be formed under charter of the State of California and the present Bank of America liquidated, the new bank taking over its assets. The new State-chartered bank, then, if it desired to continue under deposit insurance, would have to apply either to the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for membership. Federal Reserve membership automatically carries membership in the FIDC.

Compliance Would Be Required

These Federal agencies as a requisite for membership, it is said, probably would require Bank of America to comply with requirements of the Comptroller's office, which is under the Treasury. The Federal banking agencies have not always cooperated in matters of this kind, but they are said to be cooperating at present in the controversy with the Giannini organization.

In order to escape Federal regulation entirely, it is pointed out, the Giannini bank would have to forego insurance of its deposits.

Giannini, son of A. P. Giannini, disclosed that bank officials, in a conference with officials here December 15, had agreed to terms which he thought "unduly harsh." Since that time, he said, the bank has "consistently adhered" to the agreement reached then, "although the Comptroller has acted as if the agreement had never been signed."

Morgenthau Called "Vindictive"

Morgenthau, he said, has "become more and more arbitrary and vindictive," and has made the troubles with the bank "a personal matter."

He accused Morgenthau of taking over the prosecution of a number of Securities and Exchange Commission actions against the Giannini organizations, and of discussing the bank's affairs with other concerns. He asked for the December 15 hearing, he said, after Morgenthau had threatened to cite the bank's board of directors because of the declaration of dividends.

He revealed that the bank had refused to charge off a $9,000,000 loss demanded by the Comptroller, insisting that "our appraisers had appraised the property in question at $11,000,000 more than our book value."

Secret Service Previews Fake Money Films

The chief of the Secret Service and many of his key subordinates yesterday previewed three movie shorts designed to make life miserable for a group of American businessmen.

The business is counterfeiting.

Some of the businessmen, 1,800 of them, landed behind bars last year. As a cheaper and more effective way of stopping their illegal trade, however, the Secret Service will sponsor screening of the films throughout the country. The theory is that counterfeit currency, no matter how cleverly made, can be detected readily by the average citizen with a little information. The movies do the educating.

Shown yesterday at the Interioir Department auditorium in advance of general distribution to an estimated audience of 40,000,000, the films tell the story of a typical cunoterfeiter's operation and give simple and effective visual advice on how to spot currency that did not happen to be made in Uncle Sam's factory down on Fourteenth street.

One of the films was made by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, one by Columbia and the third by the Secret Service Division itself. For the first time, legally, they reproduce pictures of United States currency.

The movies, according to Chief Frank J. Wilson, are only one phase of a five-year plan to stop counterfeiting in the most foolproof way—by making citizens too smart to accept homemade greenbacks.

A more direct method, Wilson said, will be for Secret Service agents, police and bank officials to lecture on fake money detection before high school and business school students, retailers and all other groups part of whose business it is to handle currency. The films will be used as adjuncts to the lectures.

A national essay prize and hundreds of local prizes may be offered by the Federal Reserve Board and other banks to stimulate interest in the campaign, Wilson intimated.

The service is sure of the effectiveness of this type of approach, Wilson said, from experience last year in New York City. Two years ago, he explained, more than $1,500,000 in not-quite-right currency was passed there. An intensive educational campaign was begun in which agents lectured to half of the city's people whose occupations entail handling considerable amounts of money. Last year, only $400,000 in bogus bills was passed.

WPA Measuring Women of U. S. in 58 Places —Object Is to Standardize Dress Sizes

Uniform System For Whole Nation Is Project's Goal

The WPA is measuring the women of America in 58 places—all in the interests of science and closer-fitting ready-made clothes.

Sponsor of the project is the textiles and clothing division of the Bureau of Home Economics, long distressed by what it calls the "trial and error" system of determining sizes for women's garments.

Clothing manufacturers and retailers, particularly mail order houses are eager to aid in adoption of a Nation-wide uniform size scale, according to the bureau.

Feminine WPA workers, under supervision of the bureau, are now being trained in measurement techniques, to be applied to thousands of women in eight States during the present year.

Since measurements will be taken in some 200 separate projects, the bureau has issued elaborate instructions to insure that WPA workers are looking at the same thing when they measure a waist or shoulder.

The wait level, whether in Maryland or California, is "the lowest border of the lowest rib," which can be felt in a line dropped straight down from the armpit, the manual of instructions explains. The booklet tells in detail just where and how to take the other 57 measurements.

WPA workers engaged in measuring women throughout the country to standardize measurements in ready-made clothes will be permitted no such freedom as this in determining the waist level. A manual of instructions says they must locate the waist at "the lowest border of the lowest rib," which can be felt in a line dropped straight from the armpit

Man Indicted For Shooting At Wife Here

Husband Was Free by Court's Benevolence On Parole Charge

John Costello, 37, alias John Walsh, who was saved by the District Court a few months ago from return to an Illinois prison, was indicted yesterday for shooting at his 28-year-old wife, Romayne.

The man was paroled by Illinois authorities ten years ago after he had served seven years for robbery. For a year he reported to parole officials, then stopped. Last year he was detained here for alleged breach of his parole.

Walsh appealed for the writ of habeas corpus, contending that he asked whether he ought to go on reporting and received no reply. Justice Peyton Gordon, impressed by Walsh's record of ten years without trouble, refused to send the man back to Illinois.

Mrs. Walsh claimed her husband quarreled with her last month, hit her with a telephone receiver and then fired a shot at her.

Those indicted included:

Unauthorized use of automobile—Robert Morris, 33, colored; Robert J. Collins, 32; Robert O'Leary, 33, colored; Robert W. Brackett, 20.

Grand larceny—Beatrice Helmer, 22, colored; Augustus Blandheim, 25, colored; Charles Brown, 20, colored.

Housebreaking—George Lewis, 19, colored.

Housebreaking and larceny—Morris Leslie Saxton, 18; Virgil Moore, 19, colored; Lewis Benjamin, 27, colored; Israel Dudley, 23, colored; Isiah J. Queen, 26, colored.

Assault with intent to rob—Lillard I. Smith, 23, colored.

Robbery—Juanita Hawkins, 35, colored; Edna Johnson, 23, colored; Joseph Suber, 42, colored; Contee Gattis, 40, colored; Loretta Gattis, 40, colored; Virginia Lopez, 26, colored; Rutelus Brookins, 24, colored.

Assault with dangerous weapon—William J. Marshall, 47, colored; Ruth Hall, 23, colored; William H. Hawkins, 35, colored; Robert Miller, 29, colored.

Gaming Raid Traps 75 Patrons at Inn Near Forestville

Sergt. Elon Turner, of Prince Georges County police, late yesterday staged a one-man raid on the Home Stretch Inn near Forestville, Md., and arrested John M. Mahoney, of the 1200 block of G street northeast, on a gambling charge.

Also taken into custody was George A. Galleher, 900 block of Virginia avenue southwest, who was released on $100 bond as a State witness. The case was set for trial before Police Judge Walter Green at Upper Marlboro Friday.

Evidence seized by Sergt. Turner included $133 in change, a loudspeaker and a quantity of alleged racing slips. The officer said there were more than 75 patrons in the establishment and several score automobiles parked outside.

Dempsey Introduces Hatch Bills in House

Companion bills to the proposed Senate amendments to the Hatch act and the Federal corrupt practices act were introduced in the House yesterday by Representative Dempsey (Democrat), of New Mexico.

The measures, which were offered Monday in the Senate, would extend the Hatch act to District employes and State workers paid with Federal funds and broaden the corrupt practices act to prohibit all solicitation of political contributions from Government employes.

Caution Urged By Committee On Price Gains

War Demand Pushes Up Quotations on Strategic Materials

By International News Service

Disclosing rises in prices of strategic war materials since the outbreak of European hostilities, the Anti-Monopoly Committee warned yesterday that the period of most critical need for alert and cooperative action on the part of business and Government to keep prices in balance is "just ahead."

Steep commodity price increases in the World War did not begin until after August, 1915, the committee pointed out.

Although there has been a relative stability in the general commodity price level in the past four months, it said prices of strategic and critical materials have risen appreciably, and warned that the price situation "gives no cause for complacency."

Quicksilver Leads

Some of the increases noted as "important to national defense" by the committee, which has maintained a study of prices at behest of President Roosevelt, are: Quicksilver, 95 per cent; silk, 59; rubber, 15; antimony, 16.6; ferro-manganese, 25; manila hemp, 38; tungsten ore, 37.5; flaxseed, 36; hides, 41.9, and chromium ore, 14.9.

The committee found that in the four months since beginning of the war, "no serious increases in the general level of commodity prices has taken place, despite extensive rises of certain imports and of domestic products having a direct war use." It said the general price trend is still upward, and declared there is "continued need for scouting of markets."

Man of 69, in Madhouse 25 Years, Would Pit Liberty Against Trial for Slaying Father

Civil War General's Son, Now 69, Blames Temporary Insanity

By the Associated Press

White Plains, N. Y., Jan. 9.—A 69-year-old man who spent 25 years in a madhouse after shooting to death his millionaire father, Gen. Hiram Duryea, of the Civil War Zouaves, said today he was willing to stand trial for murder if freed from the asylum.

He indicated his defense would be temporary insanity.

In a habeas corpus proceeding seeking release and the right to a $1,000,000 share in his father's estate, Chester B. Duryea described in quiet, matter-of-fact tones what he recalled of his father's death.

The 81-year-old multi-millionaire starch king was shot to death in his Brooklyn mansion May 5, 1914. Seven bullets ripped through his body and police who answered the son's summons found him so violent he had to be put in a padded cell. He has been in Matteawan State Hospital for the criminal insane ever since.

Duryea, a partly-bald, soberly clad individual who looked like an elderly business man, said he did not recall attacking his father but was ready to fight a first-degree murder indictment now.

The night of the killing, he said, he was packing for a spring fishing trip with his father, who was asleep.

He said that suddenly someone ran out from his father's room on to the "sleeping balcony" where he was standing.

"I thought it was my father and called out, 'Father.' Then the figure ran back into the room. About a minute or 45 seconds later, he rushed out again. I saw something in his hand.

"He rushed for me. There was some sort of a mixup, and I broke clear. Then there was a fall. I saw what seemed to be my father on the floor.

"I was so shocked that it might be my father, that I became mentally unbalanced."

Asked point-blank by Cahill, "Did you kill your father?" Duryea answered:

"Of my own consciousness, I can't say that I did. I think something happened that might produce a great mental shock."

G.O.P. Accused Of 'Trying to Buy Negro Vote'

Rep. Mitchell Makes Charge in Debate on Anti-Lynching Bill

By the Associated Press

The House heard its only colored member, Representative Mitchell (Democrat), of Illinois, hotly charge the Republican Party yesterday with "trying to buy back the Negro vote" with the pending anti-lynching bill.

His accusation came in renewal of a controversy that recurs in every Congress. Several Republicans sought recognition to express their resentment, and Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, caustically inquired whether the colored vote was for sale.

"Every vote in the United States is for sale," Mitchell answered, "not for money, but for rights and justice."

Representative McDowell (Republican), of Pennsylvania, accused Mitchell, ardent proponent of the bill, of trying to alienate the Republicans from its support, but asserted that 98 per cent of his party colleagues would vote for it.

"Trying to Play Santa"

Representative Seccombe (Republican), of Ohio, produced a letter which he said Mitchell wrote to a constituent last November agreeing to take up a matter with the WPA if the constituent could first produce a letter from his ward committeeman.

"That indicates," said Seccombe, "who is trying to play Santa Claus and who is not, and who is trying to buy the Negro vote and who is not."

Representative Burdick (Republican), of North Dakota, asserted that Mitchell's statement was a reason for voting against the bill, but that Mitchell did not "represent the Negro race in this country." He announced he would reserve judgment as to how he would vote.

The Gavagan bill was passed by the House previously only to encounter a Southern filibuster in the Senate. The measure would seek to curb lynching by imposing penalties upon peace officers who fail to protect prisoners from lynch mobs and by making municipalities or counties liable to damage suits by dependents of lynching victims.

Faces Death in Senate

The House is expected to pass it again today, but again it faces death in the Senate.

The arguments for and against it which had been heard in past discussions were trotted out again. Southerners and a few Northerners contended it was unenforceable. Proponents denied these statements.

Representative Gavagan (Republican), New York, author of the bill, announced he planned to eliminate a section specifically exempting killings in the course of labor disputes.

While the House debated, National Guardsmen were on duty in Prentiss, Miss., to prevent what local officials feared might develop into a lynching. Crowds gathered menacingly for the arraignment of two Negroes charged with killing a peace officer.

Harrison to Get Fiscal Plan Vote

own proposal for reciprocal taxation of future issues of Federal, State and local securities, now tax-exempt.

The old manufacturers' sales tax, and broadening of the income-tax base by reducing individual income-tax exemptions were widely viewed at the Capitol as "politically too hot" for an election year.

The Ways and Means Committee has laid the tax issue aside temporarily to launch its trade act extension hearings. Chairman Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee, said his group will wait on House action unless his joint study plan is approved.

Lower Taxes Unlikely

Harrison said he has informally considered the Couzens plan, and that while it had merit, there were objections. He said it might be possible to lower the 10 per cent rate and to spread the tax over two or three years.

One main objection, he said, is that it would place an almost confiscatory burden on the highest income surtax brackets, which already range to 79 per cent. Harrison is on record in favor of limiting the highest surtaxes to 60 per cent, as an incentive to investment, but has questioned the possibility of lowering any taxes this year.

John Slavin, Artist, Thrilled At Opening 1-Man Show Here

Veteran Portrait Painter at 32, Native Washingtonian, Who Lives in Richmond, Presents 25 Oils, 5 Drawings in Display

A veteran portrait painter at the ripe old age of 32, John Slavin opened his first one-man show in Washington yesterday and didn't mind admitting he got a big thrill out of it.

It was the same John Slavin who, when 16, sold his first portrait to E. Lee Trinkle, then Governor of Virginia. The American "painting prodigy" is now firmly established, in maturity, as an artist of demonstrated merit.

Several of Slavin's former teachers at the Corcoran School of Art, where he studied from 1923 to 1929, came yesterday to the National Museum premiere to apply critical eyes to the 25 oils and five drawings. The show, in the museum's foyer, will continue through January.

Headlining the exhibition is Slavin's portrait of John Barrymore, which is the most conspicuously hung and which was completed only a few weeks ago. The actor, then playing in "My Dear Children" in Chicago, sent for the painter to put the famous Barrymore profile on canvas.

"He asked me not to pretty him up," said Slavin. "That circle under his eye, for instance, met with his approval."

Among the other portraits are those of 90-year-old Senator Henry T. Wickham, president pro-tem of the Virginia Senate; Dr. Samuel Chiles Mitchell, professor of history at the University of Richmond; "Circus Agent," which resulted in the commission to paint Barrymore; Ivan, Mr. and Mrs. Slavin's 8-year-old son, and "French Peasant," for which Mrs. Slavin was the model.

Slavin was born in Washington but has made his home in Richmond for years. He has exhibited at the Corcoran Gallery of Art but this is his first one-man show in Washington. His "Despair," which is included in the National Museum exhibition, was selected for the permanent collection of the Academy of Sciences and Fine Arts at Richmond by Gari Melchers.

The picture for which Slavin has the greatest sentimental attachment is the portrait he painted of his mother, who died when he was 12 years old. It is the only canvas in the present exhibition which was done from a photograph.

Forecast for the District of Columbia—Increasing cloudiness with slowly rising temperature Wednesday; Thursday light rain or snow with slowly rising temperature; gentle to moderate southeast and south winds.

For Maryland and Virginia—Increasing cloudiness with slowly rising temperature Wednesday; Thursday light rain with slowly rising temperature on the coast and light rain or snow with slowly rising temperature in the interior.

Conditions

The extensive disturbance over the western Atlantic Ocean continues to move eastnortheastward, being central tonight about 600 miles south of Newfoundland with lowest pressure approximately 1,000 millibars (29.53 inches). Another disturbance is moving southeastward over the northern Rocky Mountain region, Havre, Mont., 1,009.8 millibars (29.82 inches), and pressure remains low over the North Pacific States, Seattle, Wash., 1,005.8 millibars (29.70 inches). Pressure is low and falling rapidly over western Alaska, Bethel, 992.6 millibars (29.31 inches). High pressure prevails from the Plains States eastward to the Atlantic Coast, Frostburg, Md., 1,035.2 millibars (30.57 inches), but pressure is falling from Lake Superior southwestward to eastern Texas. Precipitation has occurred almost generally west of the Rocky Mountains and in the Plains States, the Missouri and upper Mississippi valleys. The temperature is still considerably below normal east of the Rocky Mountains, except from North Dakota eastward to northern Michigan, but the weather has become somewhat warmer from the southern Rocky Mountain region eastward to the Mississippi Valley.

Banker Tells Trust Probers Of Bond Issue

Act Fails to Prohibit Banks From Acting As Agents, He Says

By the Associated Press

B. A. Tompkins, vice president of the Bankers Trust Co. of New York, contended before the Monopoly Committee yesterday that the 1933 banking act did not prohibit commercial banks from acting as the agent of corporations in placing security issues with underwriting firms.

He discussed the institution's connection with refinancing of the Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co., in 1935 at a hearing which Leon Henderson, securities commissioner, said was designed to illustrate "the difficulties banks found in accomplishing the divorcement" of investment and commercial banking.

Bank Paid $25,000

The witness related that the bank was paid $25,000 for assisting in forming an underwriting syndicate, headed by Lehman Bros., to float a $16,500,000 bond issue and for assisting in placing a $5,000,000 bond issue.

When the refinancing was undertaken, committee records showed, Cleveland-Cliffs owed a group of bankers, including the Bankers Trust, $25,000,000.

The committee questioned John F. Fennelly, partner in Glore, Forgan & Co., about a letter in which he said his firm would not head a syndicate handling Indianapolis Power & Light securities because of a commitment to Lehman Bros. to take a position in that firm's underwriting group.

Fennelly said he felt "under obligation" to Lehman Bros. because he had asked them for a share in the issue and "we felt it would be an unethical thing to turn around and try to take the business away from them."

U. S. to Hear Old-Age Complaints

ant worked during a certain period and how much he earned, whether his employment was "covered" under the law, whether an appealing dependent of a deceased worker was actually a dependent and the like.

An attempt will be made, the board promised, to keep the hearings as informal and nonlegalistic as possible. Complainants may be represented by attorneys, however, under regulations to be set by the board.

In its reviewing function, the board—or a separate higher appeals group—will consider test cases and those where policy must be determined. If the complainant is still dissatisfied after his case reaches the top, he make take any question into a Federal court.

The umpires will not be under the administrative direction of the Bureau of Old-Age Insurance. They will be directly responsible to the board and independent of the agency that makes the original decision on which the appeal will be based.

The whole procedure, it is expected, will be expanded as more and more workers become 65 and receive their benefits.

The A. F. G. E. yesterday discounted "statements made in certain quarters" that the American Federation of Labor planned to remove postoffice custodial employes from A. F. G. E. jurisdiction and grant them a charter as a separate union.

The union said it had information from the "highest authority" that the A. F. L. contemplated no such thing, and that even if it did, no such charter would be granted until the A. F. G. E. had been heard on the subject. It stated that it saw no reason for relinquishing the jurisdiction and would certainly contest the move.

Navy Secretary Edison has promised that the present "limited national emergency" will in no way alter the attitude of the department toward unions of its civilian employes, the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians announced yesterday.

The union said that there had been reports that employe grievances would not be considered due to more pressing problems, but that at a conference Edison had assured the organization that the impression was "unintentional." Edison said, the union added, that he was now considering F. A. C. E. T. recommendations for an improved personnel relations policy.

minority members to select another Republican.

Chairman Taylor said he decided to appeal for volunteers and to improve the standards of the group at a conference yesterday with Representative John Taber, of New York, ranking full committee Republican, and Marcellus C. Shield, committee clerk.

As a "premium" to induce members to volunteer for the District group, Taylor said he would waive the old rule barring them from service on more than two committees. He said those who volunteer would be permitted to retain their other major subcommittee assignments as was Caldwell.

Flush Kidneys of Acid and Poisons

Gain In Health And Stop Getting Up Nights

When kidneys are continually overburdened they often become weak—the bladder is irritated—often passage is scanty and smarts and burns—sleep is restless and nightly visits to the bathroom are frequent.

A safe, harmless and inexpensive way to relieve this trouble and help restore more healthy action to kidneys and bladder is to get from any druggist a 35 cent box of GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules and take as directed.

Don't be an EASY MARK and accept a substitute — Get Gold Medal Haarlem Oil Capsules — the original — the genuine right from Haarlem in Holland. Look for the Gold Medal on the box — 35 cents.

Remember — other symptoms of kidney and bladder trouble may be backache, puffy eyes, nervousness and leg cramps. —Adv.

Treat Patients Like Guests, Nurses Urged

Venereal Clinics Only Interested in Curbing Disease, Says Official

Public clinics treating venereal diseases are not interested in the incomes of patients, but only in curbing diseases in all classes of society, Dr. George M. Leiby, director of the Bureau of Venereal Disease Control of the District Health Department, said yesterday.

He spoke at the closing sesion of the thirty-sixth annual meeting of the Graduate Nurses Association and the League of Nursing, at the Willard Hotel. Control of syphilis and gonorrhea was the topic of the two-day meeting.

An ideal clinic was outlined by Dr. Leiby, folowing his criticism that venereal disease clinics are "too often found in the basements of old buildings that no one wants to use." Locality is important in obtaining patients from all levels of society, he said, and suggested a "transition point" between "poor and wealthy sections" for all public clinics in large cities.

Patients Seen as "Guests"

"Standardization of treatment for syphilis and gonorrhea is carried too far when prescriptions are filled out by clerks—as is often the case," he declared.

Miss Mary J. Dunn, regional public health nursing consultant for the United States Public Health Society, emphasized three distinct groups which must be reached in the national drive against venereal disease.

"First the nurses and doctors, then the patients, and finally the general public must be instructed," she said. "But there is no place for melodrama in education in venereal diseases. The community must have a sane approach to the disease, and must support public health departments."

She discussed the role of the nurse in case finding and case holding. She said "doctors and nurses in clinics should feel they are hosts and hostesses, and that their patients are guests."

A paper by Lillian M. Bischoff, supervisor of nursing of the District Health Department, on essentials of conduct of a successful clinic from the viewpoint of the nurse was read.

Miss Peterson President

Elected president of the Graduate Nurses' Association at the afternoon session was Miss Annabelle Peterson. Miss Catherine E. Moran was elected vice president; Miss Mary L. Burgess, secretary; Miss Regina A. Burns, treasurer, and Miss Caroline Sweeney and Miss Gertrude Bowling, directors.

Mrs. Elizabeth C. Earle was re-elected president of the League of Nursing Education of the District. Mrs. Laura Fitzimmons was elected vice president and Miss Gladys Jorgenson re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Elected president of the private duty section was Miss M. Louise Gardiner. Miss Mary M. Carles was named vice president and Miss Piccola Linville secretary.

At a banquet last night at the Willard the nurses were entertained with songs by a group of students from Wilson Teachers' College.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Howard University School of Music presents Luther King in a song recital Tuesday night in Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel. Accompanist, Jean Houston.

Reaching the third event in its current series, Howard University School of Music presented Luther King, a young colored tenor, last evening in Rankin Chapel. Jean Houston was his accompanist in a program which wandered little from the beaten path. His classical group contained Torelli's "Tu lo sai," Buononcini's "Per la gloria d'adoravi," Handel's "O Sleep" and Beethoven's "Adelaide."

In his second group he juxtaposed the aubade, "Vainement, ma bien aimee," from Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys" with four lieder by Schubert; "Die Liebe hat gelogen," "Wohin," "Der Jungling an der Quelle" and "Die Allmacht." There followed a group of songs in English: Ernest Charles' "Clouds," Grechaninov's "My Native Land," Kjerulf's "Last Night" in an adaptation by Miss Houston, Lily Strickland's "Ma Linda Lou" and Bernard Hambleu's "I Am Fate."

A concluding group of spirituals included William Wadson's "Talk About a Child That Do Love Jesus" and three arrangements by Miss Houston of "New Born Again," "Poor Pilgrim" and "Plenty Good Room."

Mr. King has a firm and resonant voice of promising quality. His method of production needs relaxation, and he is still self-conscious in his concentration upon attack and phrasing. He has good breath control and centers his tone well, but he has not yet mastered the flexibility which will smooth certain uneven transitions from forte to piano and vica versa. His artistic sincerity is obvious, and he left an impression of earnest purpose in his interpretations.

APRES-MIDI IN MID-JANUARY. Lotus at 1 p. m. Caught in the winter wonderland of New Jersey are Manno and Strafford. So Davis and Sweeney, our town's prize jitterbugs, sub in the first show . . . A surprise is Ruth McCullough, singer from Eastern High School. A lovely snip with a blue voice and brown hair . . . The dancing line is a picture in yellow hoopskirts with royal blue bows . . . Dancer Jinette Vallon looks like Luise Rainier . . . We say hello to Chet de Chastain. The young man responds with such surprise that we're still wondering if it was Chet . . . The usual back stage arguments about changing the show. Inquiry whether the chorus is going to be called the Ball Girls, the Rita Girls or the Fun's-a-Poppin' Girls. Bill Strickland opines that the whole show ought to be called the Mid-Winter Frolics. He decides, too, to christen the hoopskirt number the "G. W. T. Wind Ballet" . . . We used the word crinoline. Bill sends out for a dictionary. Says "Think I'm going to use that word out on the floor and then find out you've been giving me double-talk?"

MAYFAIR AT 5. A violining blonde, a brunette at the organ, a red-head playing bass . . . That's the new Karson Trio. They get dozens of wires, boxes of flowers, much applause. And special greetings from Mr. and Mrs. Paul Sleeper, of Washington, who'd heard them play out in Canton, Ohio . . . Enter a Mary Martinized young man. "She's wonderful, she's sensational!" he asserts. Someone says that M. M. did do pretty well with that heart belonged to so-and-so song. He snorts, "Oh that Mary Martin. I'm talking about THE Mary Martin who sings at Del Rio . . . Arises a baseless rumor that Ray Nelson, of Cafe Caprice, is going to play accordion. It's suggested that it would really be something if Mayfair's Jimmy Byrd would play accordion. "Maybe I will," says Jimmy. We say that Beverly Stull must be informed. Quantities of postcards are produced, covered with messages calculated to distract, alarm and delight. Here's hoping that Del Rio's Herb Sachs appreciates his fan mail . . . Bert Granoff and Glen Hardman, of the Neptune Room, stop in to see what the Karson Trio is doing. By this time the blonde is playing the bass and the red-head is working on a guitar. "And you oughta see the instruments they have stored in the kitchen," confides Jimmy. "I'm afraid the chef will try to cook something in one of them" . . . The Trio comes over to chatter. The Martinized young man starts to talk M. M. Maria Karson stops him cold. She says, "Do you know I can play the accordion and the organ at the same time?"

MARY MARTIN, singing in Del Rio's Fiesta Room

RAINBOW ROOM AT 6:30. The ork resting. We ask. "What's wrong here? Ginger Lee left Rainbow to get married. Lyde's just gotten married. Penny Ford almost sang here and now she's getting married. You lost all your singers by marriage. But they never marry into the Rainbow band. Why?" Lew Berman said lazily, "Well, we're funny about bigamy for one thing. Durward there is the only vulnerable" . . . Durward looked up with the gaze of a trapped fawn.

TROIKA AT 8:30. Mischa says the new show is delayed on account of waiting for costumes . . . "They had all those costumes last year," he said. "But they put them away and, of course, they never could find them" . . . Nikolai, the new dagger dancer, is dashing but confusing. We thought at first that he was a nervous waiter with five orders of flaming beef Stroganoff. All his daggers are torches, too.

SHOREHAM AT 9:30. An imitation horse imitation of an imitation horse. No, this is not Gertrude Stein speaking. It's part of the Marionette Moderne show, also enriched by a limber gentleman who just wants to know the way to go home. There's also wheeling Spec and Spot and Lois Leeds making wheels go round in ringsider's heads.

Metronome Room at 11:30. A strange gentleman greets us in the lobby. As he removes his hat, we see it's William Hino, Wardman's new and expert maitre d'hotel . . . Not a soul we know in Metronome but blonde Boris and the orchestra. Canary Phyllis Usher comes over and we talk about why Artie Shaw is the best clarinet player in the world, which is the best of all those instrumental set-ups Carr and Don use at the Madrillon and the Debussy touch of Delius' "Summer Night on a River" . . . Eddie Brandt sits down and Phyllis says she wants to sing "Memories of You" . . . In floats Priscilla Naecker like something fallen out of the sky in ciel blue embroidered with silver swallows and things. She's fresh from "Three After Three" and Shar-Zad where it seems the Greek minister was entertaining and Patricia Hurley was dancing with Dr. Henry Beall Gwynn and Mr. and Mrs. (nee Margo Couzens) Harry Bryant were sitting in a corner . . . Eddy Brandt comes over and everybody starts to talk about risque entertainment, agree that it's perfectly terrible . . . Phyllis says, "Eddie, I want to sing 'Memories of You'" . . . Eddie gets up and sings a fairly risque ballad to an accompaniment of titters . . . He comes back and says, "Yes, they all laugh. But I wonder if I make any true friends with that sort of thing" . . . Pris says, "Are all those girls who try to call you up true friends?" He says, "Whenever you give them my number, they turn out to be female insurance agents or girls who think they can sing" . . . Phyllis says, "I must sing "Memories of You" . . . "Oh, all right," says Eddie. So Phyllis sings "Memories of You" and beautifully with cool high notes and creepy low notes.

COMES THE TIP-TOP. Next week some time "Mac" MacCarthy and Alan Puryear, both former Hour Glass, will open their new Tip-Top Inn on K street near Fourteenth. Diversion to be a pianist, singer and accordionist, all from New York.

GOING AND COMING. Arthur Todd, of the King Cole Room, will leave town next Saturday, where he'll sing and guitar at the Bahamians Club for a couple of months, returning to the K. C. R. in March

Health Record Here Better During 1939

Ruhland Reports Lower Death Rate Than in 1938

Washington wound up 1939 with a cleaner bill of health than at the end of the previous year, Health Officer George C. Ruhland announced yesterday.

Decreases were noted in infant and maternal mortality and deaths from tuberculosis, pneumonia and other communicable diseases, he said.

The birth rate went up, with 13,981 births reported for 1939, an increase of nearly 1,000 over 1938.

Infant Mortality Drops

Infant mortality for 1939 shows a rate of 47.8 per 1,000 live births and is the District's lowest rate showing so far, Dr. Ruhland said. He added he was particularly pleased to call attention to this showing because infant mortality "has long and justly been considered the most sensitive indicator of health and health progress in a community."

The present rate, which shows an achievement of definitely lowered mortality over a period of years, compares favorably with other large cities of Washington's population group and is definitely under the national experience of 51 per 1,000 live births reported for the United States registration area for 1938," he explained.

A new all-time low rate of 75.3 deaths per 100,000 of population is reported for pneumonia. This disease, says Dr. Ruhland, was responsible for the second greatest number of deaths in the District in 1936, was reduced to third place in 1937, to fifth place in 1938, and is now in seventh position among the major causes of death in the District.

29 From Communicable Diseases

Acute communicable diseases, such as typhoid fever, measles, scarlet fever, whooping cough and diphtheria accounted for 29 deaths in 1939. For scarlet fever, with only two deaths and a death rate of 0.3 per 100,000, this is a record only twice before registered in the District, Dr. Ruhland said. The mortality from measles, with two deaths recorded, stands as the lowest in history.

The lowest rate ever recorded from diphtheria was registered last year. Five deaths occurred from this disease. There was one death each from lethargic encephalitis, pellagra and poliomyelitis; no deaths occurred from either smallpox or typhus fever.

The death rate for tuberculosis was reduced from 93.8 to 90.6 per 100,000. The health officer said the better record was made possible through the grants to health service in the District by Congress and the Commissioners. He concluded that public health can be purchased and the community can, within limitations, "determine its own death rates."

W. Va. Orchardists Will Meet Feb. 7

Special Dispatch to The Post

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 9.—Problems of orchard cultivation, marketing, by products possibilities, relief purchases of apples, and election of officers will highlight the forty-seventh annual meeting of the West Virginia Horticulture Society to be held in this city February 7 and 8, Carroll R. Miller, secretary, said today in releasing the program.

Several hundred fruit growers and dealers will attend, he said, from Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware and other points in this belt.

The annual election, for officers who normally serve for two years, will be held the second day. James E. McDonald, of this country, is the retiring president. Dr. W. C. VanMetre, of Petersburg, is the vice president.

U. S. Workers' Total Reverses 8-Month Gain

November Toll Here 234; For Nation as a Loss Is Almost 5,000

After nine consecutive months of gain, the number of Federal workers in the District decreased in November, it was learned from Civil Service Commission figures released yesterday. Government employment here dropped by 234, from 126,502 in October to 126,268 in November.

Federal employment as a whole decreased by almost 5,000 in the month, continuing a decline begun in October after eight months of uninterrupted increase. The decline, it was explained, resulted almost entirely from decreases in part-time and force-account personnel.

Decreases in the District were in the Federal Works Agency and the Agriculture, Interior and Treasury departments. Increases were reported by the War and Navy Departments, Government Printing Office and Federal Security Agency.

Outside Washington, expansion of the national defense program led to increases in the Navy Department, Panama Canal and Civil Aeronautics Authority. There were seasonal rises in the Veterans Administration and Postoffice Department. Sharpest drop was in the Federal Works Agency.

The figures also revealed that more than one-fourth of all Government employes were persons working on jobs of limited or intermittent duration, or of an emergency nature.

Allen to Discuss Reorganization With Kennedy

Randolph Reveals Committee Will Speed Merger Bill

A conference between Commissioner George E. Allen and Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, is expected today to spur dormant District reorganization legislation.

Kennedy, who asked for the parley, is expected to discuss the differences between the Commissioners' plan, now before the Budget Bureau, and his own modification of the Griffenhagen proposal.

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee, yesterday said reorganization will be given the right of way on the committee calendar providing the sub-committee comes to an early agreement. He said he will confer this week with Representative Dirksen, ranking minority member.

Informal comments by committee members indicated local suffrage and the Kennedy-Griffenhagen plan face serious opposition in the sub-committee and full committee.

Representatives Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, and Seccombe (Republican), of Ohio, said they would be inclined to go along with the recommendations of the Commissioners, although they could not comment on the Seal plan until its details were made public.

Representative d'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland, one of the newest members, reiterated his approval of suffrage.

Of the five members of the Kennedy subcommittee, three have expressed opposition to linking suffrage with reorganization. One is undecided. The opponents are Representatives Dirksen, Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, and McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi. Bates said he has not made up his mind.

Seccombe said he will fight suffrage if it comes before the full committee and is willing to go before local civic organizations to explain his reasons.

On the Senate side, McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, said he will vote for ample consideration of the suffrage issue when District reorganization comes before the Senate District Committee.

D. C. Courts Expedite Work By Pretrial

Double Efficiency In Disposition Of Civil Cases

The District Court in one year has more than doubled its efficiency in disposing of contested civil cases, complete reports for the October term showed yesterday.

The report was the first to reflect the success of the pretrial hearing system, which has streamlined 533 cases since it was introduced in September.

Unofficial tabulation some weeks ago indicated the court's improvement and evoked applause from lawyers and civic leaders. The extent of the gain, however, was not announced by Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat until yesterday, after he received the first report of Justice Bolitha J. Laws, who presides over the pretrial division of the District Court.

Cases disposed of between July and the end of December in 1938 totaled 1,076. The corresponding figure for 1939 was 1,584.

The court settled 724 cases in the last half of 1938 and 1,475 in the same period for 1339. This total included cases which were settled in all stages of their progress.

The 2-to-1 ratio, however, was found in the totals of cases which were not disposed of until they had gone through preliminary stages and were set for trial.

Justice Laws' report pointed out the large increase of cases disposed of without trial in 1939. Some of these were dropped for want of prosecution or other reasons, "but the overwhelming number of them represented compromise settlements."

This improvement reflected the work of the pretrial division. Justice Laws said approximately 243 cases were settled by such compromises in 1938 and 692 in 1939. "The experience in other jurisdictions," his report commented, "has been that one of the features of pretrial procedure is the increase in the number of cases compromised, and the statistics of our court seem to show clearly the same experience in this jurisdiction."

Justice Laws said part of the increase was due to the fact one more judge was sitting in the District Court in 1939 than in 1938.

An open letter to the motoring public

Advertising writers can't make gasoline.

A bombardment of claims and counter claims has broken loose—and it may confuse the purchaser of gasoline.

Since the public has a right to be accurately informed about the gasolines sold today, the American Oil Company wishes to make a statement of policy regarding its regular gasoline and special motor fuel.

Comparing the quality of crude is not enough. Comparing anti-knock is not enough. It is the sum total of all the desirable quality characteristics that makes a good gasoline or motor fuel.

This constitutes the only real yardstick for comparison. Fair comparisons should take in every quality a good gasoline or motor fuel should have.

During the 29 years of its existence, the American Oil Company has not found it necessary to change the names of its products. Throughout all of this period, it has kept faith by constantly improving its products.

The American Oil Company has the largest and most modern refining units in the world.

The achievements of its scientists and engineers have been recognized as among the most important advances in chemical engineering.

The American Oil Company has the resources and facilities to furnish the best products and the highest values obtainable from crude petroleum.

We know what goes into Amoco-Gas and American Gas. We know these products never have had—and still do not have—any equals in their respective fields. Regardless of competitive claims, we say this unqualifiedly and without reservation.

As to American Gas, we sell it for exactly what it is—a pure, "sweet," 100% petroleum product. It is not "hopped up" with added chemicals which are not combustible. Its full range of quality characteristics comes from petroleum only. We don't try to make it a premium gas by merely calling it one. American Gas is the best buy at regular gas price.

As to Amoco-Gas, it is our premium motor fuel. It costs more to make. It's worth more. It does more. It must sell for more. You can not get a real premium fuel at a regular gas price. Amoco-Gas is instantly recognizable as a premium motor fuel by the velvety smoothness of the car's operation.

You can't get something for nothing. We have faith in the inherent common sense of the motorist—and in his ability to separate fact from claim.

American Oil Company products are the finest obtainable. They are backed by the entire resources of the American Oil Company, and accepted by the public as honest values, honestly described.

The remarkable increase in the sales of American Oil Company products proves that the motorist continues to be discriminating and alert in recognizing the "Sign of Greater Values."

Cracks In The Axis

The recent conversations between the Italian and Hungarian foreign ministers are reported to have resulted in a defensive alliance between the two countries.

Thus far, however, there has been no official confirmation of this report. To be sure, in view of the close relations which have long obtained between the Rome and Budapest governments, there is nothing inherently improbable in a pledge by Italy to come to Hungary's assistance if the latter's independence were threatened. But the vital and unanswered question is whether Italy would be prepared to support Hungary against a German attack, as well as against a Russian thrust.

For some time the Italian press has been full of warnings to Moscow to stay out of the Balkans. On the other hand, Italian references to Germany remain uniformly friendly and the Rome-Berlin Axis continues to be regarded by the Fascist government as a continuing, if inactive, diplomatic reality.

As it happens, Hungary and the Balkan nations are menaced not from one side but from two. They cannot safely ignore the possibility that a thrust in their direction would be a joint or parallel undertaking by Russia and Germany. In planning their defenses, therefore, Balkan statesmen and military leaders must make preparations against the Moscow-Berlin combination as a unit.

Under the circumstances it is not surprising that recent months have seen them closing their ranks. And while, thus far, no solid Balkan bloc has emerged, the nations of southeastern Europe are beginning to feel somewhat more secure. The Finnish deflation of Russia's military reputation has helped. King Carol's recent pronouncement that Rumania will fight any incursion on her territory was not made until it was clear that Russia had suffered serious defeats.

For reasons of prestige, as well as out of considerations of strategy, Italy cannot afford to see Hungary and the Balkan states swallowed up by Soviet Russia or Germany or both. But the more Italy makes her position clear in this particular the more she inevitably tends to widen the gap between Berlin and Rome, especially when the force of circumstances is tending to increase the degree of collaboration between Hitler and Stalin.

Facts And More Facts

The work of collecting facts for the decennial census will not start until April. But already the Census Bureau has published a list of the questions to be asked in taking the population, agriculture and housing censuses. The work of assembling and tabulating returns relating to 132,000,000 people, 33,000,000 homes, and 7,000,000 farms is a stupendous undertaking calling for careful preliminary planning and systematic organization.

Of especial interest to the general public is the announcement that the scope of the census is to be expanded with a view to throwing more light on internal social and economic problems. For example, an attempt will be made to determine wages and salaries earned during the previous year. Information designed to throw light on migration will be obtained. More detailed questions about education will also be asked.

Questions included in the housing schedule are very comprehensive and, as Secretary Hopkins says, the replies should provide facts from which to judge "immediate needs for dwelling construction, repair or modernization"—information "of vital importance in discussing the future of our economy."

The reasons assigned for the enlarged scope of the 1940 census are of especial significance. We can never have too many pertinent facts about the resources of the country and the activities of the people, for as the Bureau of the Census says, "The correlating force in a democracy is mass intelligence, and mass intelligence feeds on census facts."

The census authorities rightly believe that census facts have taken on a "new value" since the Federal Government embarked upon a program of social planning. "Uncle Sam himself," we are told, "by reason of his investment in housing, farm loans and business loans, has become the world's greatest banker. Census facts provide his most important operating statistics. Important movements like social security, maternal and child welfare, health, housing, unemployment relief, and the whole agricultural program, based on production levels as shown by the census, are examples of the increasing need for guiding facts in a society of increasing complexity."

This matter-of-fact acceptance of the census as an aid to governmental operations, as well as a repository of information for the guidance and enlightenment of the individual, is an eloquent commentary upon the extent to which the Government has become a dominant factor in the economic life of the country.

Mr. Murphy's Successor

It is now less than a month since Attorney General Frank Murphy publicly expressed conviction that the holder of that important office should remain wholly aloof from politics. To emphasize the point Mr. Murphy advocated banning any Attorney General from eligibility to an elective office until two years after leaving the Department of Justice.

The reasoning by which Mr. Murphy reached this viewpoint is clear and incontestable. The Attorney General is the chief law officer of the Administration. It is his duty not merely to insure that the law is enforced by the Government in power but also to see that the Government itself does not encroach upon the legal rights of any of its citizens. "The office of Attorney General," as Mr. Murphy says, "involves powers that might be abused by a politically ambitious person." It also involves grave responsibilities that a politically ambitious person, making his personal advancement a major consideration, would certainly endeavor to evade.

Robert H. Jackson, designated last week to suceed Mr. Murphy, has lost no time in demonstrating that he wholly disagrees with his predecessor's position. Mr. Jackson strongly indicated, in his speech at Cleveland on Monday night, that in his estimation politics come first and principles a long way afterwards. "The Party And The Nation" was the well-chosen title of Mr. Jackson's remarks. He puts them in that order.

Before voting for his confirmation as Attorney General the text of Mr. Jackson's remarks in Cleveland should be read and pondered by every Senator. For its shallow thinking, even more than its intemperate partisanship, stamp the speaker as one unfitted to hold the quasi-judicial post to which he aspires, the more so if he regards it as a temporary stepping stone.

"The greatest asset of the Democratic Party," says Mr. Jackson, is President Roosevelt. That will be news for those who believe that the standard is always more important than the standard bearer. But if naive in his hero worship, the new Cabinet appointee was still too subtle to urge a third term for Mr. Roosevelt in frank and outright language, such as that used by Secretary Wallace.

The nominee for the Attorney Generalship would "first turn to the one leader" who is adored "in the humble homes of the Nation whence cometh our help." But if the Fuehrer should himself decide to step down it should be understood that there are others whose hearts bleed as freely for those who have votes to deliver. There are sycophants who would be glad to snatch the mantle of authority if and when it is dropped by the Great White Father. They have basked in his smile and they most appropriately possess the true Jacksonian faith in a Government "completely controlled by Democrats."

Robert H. Jackson, in Cleveland, spoke precisely as Himmler might speak in Nazi Germany or as Molotoff in Soviet Russia. There is nothing new in this sedulous flattery of the peerless leader by a competent underling who has been raised so high that he may now aspire to the very pinnacle of fame. It is a form of appeal for personal consideration which always blossoms out whenever the question of succession to a ruling potentate arises. There was nothing new, and nothing of itself important, in the perfumed bilgewater which Mr. Jackson sprayed on the radio in Cleveland.

What was important in this speech was its tragic evidence of the complete miscasting of Robert H. Jackson in the role of Attorney General. Fortunately the revelation has come in time. It should certainly encourage the Senate to ask this nominee, in advance of confirmation, for his opinion of Mr. Murphy's thoughtful recommendation. If confirmed as Attorney General, would Mr. Jackson publicly agree that for two years after leaving that post he will seek no elective office?

Foe Of Exploitation

Senator Hatch, of New Mexico, has acquired an enviable reputation as the foremost foe of political exploitation on Capitol Hill. Enactment of the Senator's bill forbidding Government employes to take an active part in politics has proved to be only the first step in his program for more efficient and scientific public service.

The Hatch act now in effect deals with the problem in broad strokes. Its purpose is to make civil service restrictions upon political activity applicable to all Federal employes, whether or not in the classified service. From that base the Senator is now working both to extend this ban to certain State employes and to plug up loopholes in the corrupt practices act.

Both of his new bills ought to be passed so that they may be operative before the 1940 election. The District has a special interest in the measure forbidding political activity to State employes paid in part by Federal funds. That measure would also bring all District employes under the protective mantle of the original Hatch act.

Congress recognized the undesirability of permitting politicians to exploit Government workers when it passed the corrupt practices act 15 years ago. Presumably it was then believed that political pressure on Government employes could be eliminated by forbidding bureau chiefs to solicit political funds from their subordinates. But politicians outside of the Government service are still free to intimidate employes whose jobs are not protected by civil service.

Obviously Government workers should be relieved from any pressure of this sort. If political contributions are to be made by public servants, they should be entirely voluntary.

Senator Hatch will be fortunate, however, if he can push these urgent bills through Congress simultaneously. From the strategical point of view, it might be wiser to concentrate attention upon one at a time.

Not As A Candidate

Franklin D. Roosevelt spoke as an elder statesman in addressing the Jackson Day dinner here on Monday night. The speech contained no more than a sprinkling of politics. In substance it was the seasoned reflection of a man who is approaching the end of his services in the White House, and who has therefore submerged partisanship beneath a "philosopher's satisfaction."

Those who expected the President to announce in so many words that he will not seek or accept a third term were disappointed. The President is getting too much enjoyment, and perhaps too much advantage, out of making a mystery of his intentions. But he certainly did not speak as a candidate for office. Throughout his address emphasis was laid upon disinterested public service as opposed to the narrow partisan view.

The President lauded the achievements of his own Administration in rather glowing terms. But he gave no indication that he is looking forward to new struggles. Rather his effort was to show that the New Deal, like the Administrations of Jefferson, Jackson and Lincoln, has accomplished its major aim. In his concluding paragraphs he went so far as to advise party leaders as to the qualifications their new standard bearer should have.

So the speech may be properly regarded as the mellow reflections of an experienced Chief Executive who is looking forward to the end of his arduous duties. The President has reason to be pleased over many accomplishments of his Administration. Undoubtedly the New Deal has ushered in a keener sense of governmental responsibility for the public welfare. It has corrected many abuses and has set some worthy standards. But it is questionable whether the Administration attained a high rating under the yardstick which the President himself applied.

". . . The measure of greatness of any party leadership," he said, "is the measure in which it gets done in its time the big job that has to be done." The "big job" confronting the country in 1933 was recovery. The army of unemployed still with us, and the continuation of enormous relief expenditures, suggest that much of the job which the New Deal tackled remains to be done. Likewise our $42,000,000,000 debt, and the chronically unbalanced budget, indicate that Mr. Roosevelt is passing on to his successor bigger problems than he has solved.

In effect, the President made a bid for appraisal of his Administration on the basis of its motives instead of mistakes in "smaller things." It is doubtful whether history will follow this advice. The future will chronicle the problems the New Deal has created as well as those which it has solved. The President is undoubtedly right, however, in his seeming conclusion that the lights and shadows in the record will be mixed in more favorable proportion if that record includes no assault upon the two-term tradition.

Stations Incognito

From the Christian Science Monitor

Britain's railways are to make a great effort to improve conditions that have resulted from the nightly blackout. Particularly, they hope to devise some means, which will not break the regulations, of lighting station names. At present the traveler, especially one whose destination is a small wayside station, is not finding it easy to arrive. If a porter be not there to cry out the secret, or be far in the distance, with an accent not quite that of a radio announcer, the passenger may peer in vain through his window into the darkness that shrouds a station; while, somewhat after the fashion of Mr. T. S. Eliot's cat.

His mind is engaged in a rapt contemplation
Of the thought, of the thought, of the thought of its name,
Its ineffable effable
Effanineffable
Deep and inscrutable name.

Happy the man who has sternly counted his stations, who, having refused to affront fortune with 40 winks, can rely on her walking out with him in the dark. But happier still the favored one who is warned by signs and portents, by a long and noisy tunnel, or a steep gradient that the end is near. He alone can say:

There is no effort on my brow—
I do not strive, I do not weep.
I rush with the swift spheres, and glow
In joy, and, when I will, I sleep.

The Fire Report

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

May I be permitted to stress through the columns of your progressive paper my vigorous objection and protest against the recommendations and report of the survey committee relative to Fire Department consolidation, reductions of personnel and equipment of the District of Columbia Fire Department service.

In my opinion, if acted upon favorably, it will prove a false alarm, blunder and a serious mistake in many ways. I am rather surprised that the Board of Commissioners would sanction such an unwise and unpopular move. It has taken years of hard and diligent work and expense to build up the Fire Department to its present standard and efficiency. Then in a jiffy or spurt, or upon the suggestions and recommendations of some minor advocates, gains may be lost.

I trust the press of our city, the various citizens and business associations, civic groups and other organizations of all sorts, along with the citizens and property owners of the District, will unite and protest the changes advocated. I trust all these groups will urgently and jointly request Congress to ignore and veto the changes sought in the fire service. HENRY F. ASH.

Broun's Views

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I want to express my appreciation and approval of E. B. Henderson's excellent letter in praise of Heywood Broun and Dr. Kelly Miller.

I think it would be a fine new year's resolution for every newspaper in the country to have on their staffs at least one columnist who expresses the same liberal and humanitarian views as Heywood Broun.

In spite of the fact that the vast majority of newspapers opposed Roosevelt he was elected by a tremendous popular vote. And even though they can't find their views expressed in newspapers, they go right on thinking and believing the same way. And in the last analysis it is these unvocal millions who elect the President and the members of Congress and thus run the country.

THINKING HOUSEWIFE.

Civilization Will Survive

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Some of us think that this present World War will end our civilization. Even optimists fear these troublous times. At any rate, the chances are that if we are lucky enough to miss the impact of singing bullets, the deadly pressure of depth charges, the thunderous whip of air bombs, the frightening roar of cannons, and other numerous means of war, we shall wake up to see the world changed into "something new and strange."

It is easy to foretell what that new and strange change will be. Doubtless it will include more hunger, homelessness, poverty, diseases, and general want. The people will be poor indeed, even as most of us have no claim to riches these days.

One thing is certain, that war cannot end civilization. This turmoil in Europe and in China, or any other war, will never terminate the progressive spirit of man. Civilization is not only a matter of buildings, machinery, paved roads, and other visible signs of progress, but it is an impregnable spirit nourished by the seed of Christianity. As long as there is a loving Christian left in the world after the war, we shall find a newer and better civilization.

For A Local Elective City Government

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Congratulations on your editorial in The Post of January 7, wherein you point out the necessity for establishing a real city government in Washington which shall be composed of, and responsible to, local citizens!

May I, at this time, use your columns to answer some of the objections which I have heard advanced against the establishment of a local, elective city government here?

1. It is contended that large numbers of Washington citizens, particularly Federal employes, would prefer to retain voting rights in the States whence they came. The answer is that the right to vote in municipal elections is not coincident with or contingent upon the right to vote in State elections.

There would be no conflict between the right to vote and hold office in the City of Washington and the right to vote in any State. This distinction is quite common in adjoining Maryland and Virginia towns. There is, of course, a conflict in so far as national representation is concerned.

2. It is contended that divisions along national political lines would result in the balance of power being held by racial or other groups, subject to manipulations by corrupt politicians. The answer is that municipal governments in this day and age are nonpartisan.

Any law setting up an elective municipal government here would, of course, follow the lead of enlightened municipalities and prohibit the use of party designations on the ballot. This objection is, however, applicable to national representation.

3. Federal employes would be prohibited from holding elective office or actively participating in municipal elections which would stifle the activities of a large and important group of citizens. The answer is that Federal employes have not been so prohibited in town elections in Maryland and Virginia.

It is understood that even the Hatch act, under latest interpretations, does not prohibit activity or even officeholding in nonpartisan municipal elections. The Hatch act would, however, apply to elections for members of Congress or Presidential electors, should national representation be secured here.

You will note that in answering each of the above objections which have been raised against local suffrage I have stressed the fact that they are applicable to national representation. This is not done because I am opposed to national representation. I am not.

Neither are the vast majority of local suffrage advocates. We believe in the American system of government throughout. We believe that national representation was inadvertently omitted from the Constitution of the United States, and should be secured as promptly as possible by an amendment thereto.

However, we are tired of having the advocates of national representation continually stress its importance even to the extent of putting it ahead of the securing of a real municipal government, elected by and responsible to the people of Washington.

The "exclusive jurisdiction" provision of the Constitution was never intended to be more than a requirement that the seat of the Federal Government should be free from the control of any one of the States. It was not intended and cannot be construed to prohibit, the exercise by the people of the Federal area of their basic right of local self-government.

It is time to put an end to the un-American tyranny to which the people of the Nation's Capital have been so long subjected.

'Monkey' Society

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The story in The Post of January 7 on Mr. W. Averill Harriman leads one to speculate on how much longer a so-called civilized society will tolerate the preposterous state in which one man is allowed to own $100,000,000, while millions of hard working men would be grateful to own $100.

Is there any possible justification for this discrimination, any good that it serves? Is any one man a million times more worthy than another? If so what has made him so? Merely the inheritance of a large fortune?

How is business to be restored and "prosperity" to be regained if one man alone has the purchasing power that should be distributed among millions? Naturally all of his needs and desires are already glutted. What are the disinherited to use for money?

The comfortably complacent belief that one man may have so enormously much more than his share without depriving others, that wealth drops like manna from the skies, is of course not founded on fact. Every huge fortune of one is acquired at the expense of many.

I sometimes wonder if humans have as much elementary intelligence as monkeys. If a jungle monkey were to corner the jungle supply of cocoanuts, piling up a million against the majority's one, the other monkeys would make short work of him.

But the human monkeys admire and pay homage to him—and hail him as a captain of industry.

Calm Discussion

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Most of us, prior to September, 1939, did not believe that there would be a general war in Europe. Most of us were wrong. Then, we said, well, in any event this war will not reach the Western Hemisphere.

December 13 there was fought off the Uruguayan coast what, up to date, has been the major naval engagement of the war. We have sworn—upon the proverbial stack of Bibles, based upon our experiences with international meddling, that nothing, no nothing can ever get us into war again—except, of course, for defense. Let us hope that we are guessing right this time; but are we, and in this connection, have we accurately discounted the psychology of war, or war hysteria?

John is our good, average, American citizen. He is inclined toward peace and amity. He likes his brier and his carpet slippers and doesn't quite see, as he reads of portentous threats of war, why the rest of the world can't behave itself.

His favorite theme song is "Home, Sweet Home," until—comes the bugle's loud blare, the cadenced thrump, thrump, thrump of drum and marching feet. Well, along about here John's red corpuscles begin to stir. "Nobody is going to insult our flag and get way with it," and, maybe, "Johnny get your gun, gun, gun," is this occasion's proper anthem.

We would not have John other than he is, but is he in favored position to judge of the right or wrong of any issue, or of war's frightful and eternal consequences?

I do not believe that this question is moot, but timely—perhaps the most important before the nation today. Some international complications seem even now in the offing and I do believe that now, while we are at peace with all nations, is the opportune time for calm and considered discussion, by press and forum, of what our course should be in event of a seemingly, and suddenly arising 'casus belli.'

The Post Impressionist

The Prize

It was early in the afternoon and the habitues of the Faculty Club had not yet gathered at their accustomed spots. The lounge was deserted. Downstairs, however, from the card room, came an unmistakable noise.

I found Freyling there, barricaded behind a dozen ice-laden buckets, from which projected the tops of beer bottles. Freyling himself had been sampling, it appeared. He was by no means gone in drink, but, by his own admission, "hoefflich animiert."

At the moment he was brandishing a fragment of pretzel in the air and shouting to his dachshund, Mutti, "What would you rather be than a Nazi?"

Mutti obligingly rolled over onto her fat back, put her legs in the air and played dead. She was rewarded with the pretzel.

Freyling saw me and banged on the table with his fist.

"The beer's on me today," he shouted. "In 30 years' service in the pedagogical galleys, I have never had such an occasion for rejoicing. Today is my day for public gloating. I'm going to tell this story to anyone who can be bribed by beer to listen. Open up a bottle and I'll rehearse on you."

You may, or you may not remember, Freyling began, that a month or so ago it was announced that Stephen Kolschik won the national Carl Schurz Foundation essay prize. The competition, open to students in all American colleges and universities, was for the best essay on a phase in the life of Goethe.

When Steve let me look over his paper before he sent it off, I was certain it was the best that would be written this year and never doubted that it would win, except for the fact that Oehler, at Yale, was chairman of the prize committee. I do not like Oehler. He returns the feeling, at a usurious rate of interest.

You probably don't know Steve Kolschik. He's in my senior seminar and, although he doesn't know it yet, he's going to get highest honors.

The boy is a wonder. He's a townie and his father runs a tailor shop and his mother never has learned to speak anything but Polish. Despite that, Steve is one of those people that makes a professor's life worth living. The job he's doing for me on Schelling is Ph. D. stuff, really.

He's by no means a grease ball, either. You'll see him next spring on third base with the team, or any Saturday night with the prettiest girl at St. Helen's. He's popular with the boys. He's got what it takes.

To get back to the competition. His essay was so good that even Oehler couldn't help giving him the prize. We were duly gratified with the announcement.

I forgot to say that there are two prizes given each year by the Schurz Foundation. One goes to the best paper in English; the other to the best essay written in German.

Today the printed copies of the winning essays arrived in the mail. I glanced at the pamphlet only long enough to see that the winner of the German essay was a lad at the University of Wisconsin, and then I tossed the booklet aside to read later.

Steve got a copy, too. An hour ago he was banging at my door. He told me he had read the German essay and that the award was outrageous.

Frankly, I wasn't surprised Oehler's judgment is something indescribable. He's a pedantic, smug little Dutchman who shouldn't have been allowed to teach kindergartners to blow their noses. His highest scholastic achievement is a volume on the use of the dative case in Middle High German. He struts. The only thing he has done with his head in 20 years is to grow rolls of fat over the back of his collar.

So I wasn't surprised at Steve's observation. But then he started to explain. He told me that when he read the first page of the essay he gasped at the boy's mastery of German. When he read the second page he was convinced that no undergraduate in America could write such brilliant German. And when he read the third page, he recognized the source. The "original essay" had been taken, word for word and comma for comma, from a section of not some obscure book but the definitive biography of Goethe, by Houston Stewart Chamberlain.

In case you don't know it, Chamberlain's relationship to Goethe is like Carlyle's to the French Revolution or Einstein's to the Fourth Dimension. Anybody who professes to teach German, much less to give prizes on essays on Goethe, who doesn't recognize Chamberlain—well, dammit man, Steve, an undergraduate who hasn't even specialized in Goethe, caught it.

It seems to me I implied as much in a letter I just sent to Oehler.

Freyling broke a piece off a pretzel and dangled it in front of Mutti's nose.

"What would you rather be than Oehler when he gets my letter," he said.

Diplomat's Path

GEORGE SPELVIN'S son, the one they call Dummy Spelvin, has been giving the old man a lot of worry lately, because George isn't going to last forever and he wants the kid to get started at something. So Mr. Spelvin was cheered the other day when Dummy said he thought he would like to be a diplomat.

"I don't see why I couldn't be a diplomat," Dummy said.

"I don't, either," said the old man. "Except you have to spend a few years preparing for a career."

"How do I do that?" Dummy asked.

"Well," George said, "you have to get married to some rich queen first and give a lot of her money to the national committee."

"Have you got any rich queens in mind?" Dummy asked.

"No," the old man said, "but you ought to be able to snag one around some saloon in New York or maybe Palm Beach. That is where they hang around.

"The way to do it is you become a playboy. You hang around saloons and never pay any bills, but just crack funny jokes when the waiter comes and say, 'give it to her.' You pretend like you think it's a great joke to make the women pay for your drinks and the hack fares and all."

"But," Dummy said, "then if'n they don't take it as a joke."

A Great Life With Easy Hours

"IF'N THEY don't, then you can make up your mind you are not the right type for a diplomat," his old man said. "That is the first step to qualify for a career. It is like the entrance examination. If you can't bum a few drinks off a glammer girl you are not ever going to get one to give you $25,000 to give to the national committee to buy you a job as a diplomat. But if you get by it's a great life, with easy hours, and the beauty of it is that everybody knows you are just a big dummy that got married to a rich queen. Nobody ever expects you to do anything bright."

"Yes, but, Paw," Dummy said, "suppose I and her don't get along. Suppose we fight the way you and Maw do, all the time, and suppose we get divorced?"

"Oh," the old man said, "That is all right; in fact, that is practically compulsory. You won't hardly get any recognition without a divorce first. But after you have married one rich queen and divorced her, you will be surprised how the rest of them will fall in line to marry a dashing society scion. You can take your pick then, because you will have your name in all the saloon columns of the papers as a scion. That is what they call the bums who hang around the society saloons. I think it is a French word meaning saloon bum, but a society saloon bum."

State Chairman Fixes It All Up

"YES," said the Dummy, "and then who do I make application to for the job? To the State Department."

"No," the old man said. "The State Department doesn't have anything to do with appointing diplomats. The State Department just furnishes the clerks and secretaries who do the work. You have to make your application to the State chairman, and he will fix it up for you to make some speeches on the air about conditions. Not any particular conditions, but general conditions. They will fix it up so that people begin to hear through the papers that you are not only a scion, after all, but a serious young Dummy, determined to devote your wife's fortune to solving the problems of the national committee.

"So, by that time there comes a vacancy in some second-string country and you are a diplomat, with your charming wife.

"But, paw," the Dummy said, "Do I have to spend all my time living in Europe and all those places? Does a diplomat have to do that?"

"No," said Mr. Spelvin, "that ain't necessary. You just go to the foreign country for about six weeks and meet the king and the local scions. Then you come back home for a vacation and stay home and hang around saloons in New York and Palm Beach. The more I look at you, Dummy, the more I am sure you were born for it."

Page Belittles Rumor of Plot to Blow Up Dam

Commissioner John C. Page, of the Bureau of Reclamation, yesterday belittled rumors of a plot to blow up Boulder Dam by floting mines into the sluice gates, where they would be exploded. "The dam is much too sturdy to be badly damaged in that manner," he said.

The new policy of assigning two guides to each party of tourists is explained by a desire "to do all our visitors justice," he said.

"The public at large has demonstrated such a great interest in Boulder Dam and has behaved itself so well while there, that I believe all these rumors should be disposed of once and for all in justice to our guests, past, present and future," Page concluded.

Mrs. Roberts Resigns From Red Cross Post

The resignation of Mrs. Effie A. Roberts, secretary of the production department, District Chapter of the American Red Cross, was announced yesterday by Brig. Gen. F. R. Keefer, chapter chairman.

After serving as production secretary since 1917, Mrs. Roberts will take up volunteer work, it was reported.

On The Record

The Dismissal of Mr. Hore-Belisha

THE REASONS for the dismissal of Mr. Leslie Hore-Belisha as British minister for war are still obscure. Perhaps they will remain so for some time. One can only speculate about them. But several things must be taken into account.

Mr. Hore-Belisha is not an endearing personality to those who come into ragular contact with him. He is startlingly brilliant intellectually, and that is a quality that is usually suspect in Great Britain. If one has it, one should, it seems, keep it as carefully concealed as possible. Mr. Hore-Belisha, who has degrees from half a dozen universities, more or less, including Heidelberg and the Sorbonne, is a classical scholar who reads Latin and Greek daily. That, at least, is his reputation. He is arrogant about his intellectual prowess and that does not help, particularly in dealing with army men. In the House of Commons he was always known as the best master of the ironic jibe in that body of effective talkers. But the ironic does not increase one's popularity in council meetings.

Was Wonder-Child; His Idol Disraeli

HE IS TERRIFICALLY ambitious; his idol is Disraeli, for whose day-to-day life he can account, even to knowing the size of his shoes. And he has the reputation of being a master of intrigue.

He was a wonder-child—a major in the army, during the last war, and a member of the House of Commons at 25. He is given to the spectacular—he once slapped a critic's face in public and made the nation ring with it. And he is a Jew, which neither in England nor anywhere else is an advantage.

As for his politics—although he is a member of the National Liberal Party, his predilections are extremely conservative. He is a Tory, if there is a Tory, and to interpret his dismissal as a blow against "labor" or a triumph for the "right" seems quite absurd. Mr. Hore-Belisha's democratization of the army was done in the interests of efficiency and morale, not for "ideological" reasons.

Mr. Hore-Belisha has also been under fire in the past for various matters—for instance, in the Sandys affair. Duncan Sandys, a member of the House of Commons and a son-in-law of Winston Churchill, charged, in the summer of 1938, that the air defenses of Britain were in a seriously inadequate condition. Mr. Hore-Belisha threatened to use the official secrets act to gag him. At this time the House of Commons took the side of Mr. Sandys, and Hore-Belisha was reprimanded.

British Views Vary On Course Of War

IT IS DIFFICULT, furthermore, to see why the Nazis should find any cause for rejoicing in the dismissal of Mr. Hore-Belisha, except, of course, for propaganda reasons. They are doing their best to exploit it as a welcome evidence of Nazi tendencies in Great Britain. But it would seem likely to indicate a more vigorous prosecution of the war, rather than the opposite.

There are several viewpoints in England regarding this matter of the prosecution of the war. There is still a considerable "appeasement" bloc, whose program is to hold the British hand, count that Hitler will be overthrown by Goering—who might, they think, renounce all claims to further "lebensraum," restore old frontiers and liberties, enter into economic agreements with Britain and France, and, in short, establish a conservative rule under the army or a restored monarch. This group also hopes for a possible deflection of the German war spirit, under Goering, into a crusade against bolshevism.

This hope is being sedulously cultivated by the Nazis themselves.

At the other pole are those who argue that Hitler can better stand the "permanent war" than the Allies; that unless he is forced to use up vast amounts of materials in active warfare, he can keep the country together and behind him; that the only thing that will break down the Nazi regime will be serious defeats, and that Hitler is holding his followers because the German people believe that Britain and France have no stomach for the war.

Hore-Belisha Leaned To Waiting Attitude

IN THE CENTER is the group who believe that Britain and France should wait; that time is on their side; that the blockade is working; that Russia's aims are in doubt, and that she may yet come to blows with Germany in Scandinavia or Finland.

Mr. Hore-Belisha is known to have leaned toward this latter viewpoint. He is an exponent of the ideas of Capt. Liddel-Hart who, until a few weeks ago, was the military expert of the London Times and whose book, "The Defense of Britain," has been said to have been written at the instigation of the war minister.

Capt. Liddell-Hart believes that the defense has a great advantage over the attack, that the chief risk of losing a war lies in trying to win it by the mirage of a decisive victory, and that the most effective modern warfare is a sort of super-guerrilla war.

He questions the wisdom of sending large expeditionary forces to the continent, and holds that the object of the war should not be to conquer the enemy, but to prove to him that he cannot conquer, either.

British Defense Plan May Take A Turn

TO WHAT EXTENT these have been Mr. Hore-Belisha's views, this column does not pretend to know, but he was certainly very closely in touch with Capt. Liddell-Hart, and the soundness of such views would also depend upon what the Nazis may, in the opinion of the British intelligence department, be planning to do. If, as Lord Lothian seemed to predict in his Chicago speech, the Nazis themselves are planning a terrific offensive in the spring, the defense plans of Britain might well take a different turn.

Nor is it possible to see in Mr. Hore-Belisha's dismissal so simple an explanation as that the "generals" have won over the civilians. Mr. Winston Churchill is certainly a civilian, and as brilliant an intellectual as Mr. Hore-Belisha. His star, however, has been in the ascendant ever since the masterly defeat of the Graf Spee. And Mr. Churchill is an activist.

It would seem, therefore, to this column that the dismissal of Mr. Hore-Belisha can only indicate the expectation that the war, very soon, is to pass into a much more active phase, in which greater unity of command will be essential.

Mr. Hore-Belisha has, perhaps, fulfilled his function. He has greatly modernized the army. He has gotten rid of a great deal of dead wood. He has assured the British troops of better living conditions than any army has ever enjoyed in all history.

Even the generals, with whom he is supposed to be at loggerheads, are his own choice. His boldest move, after he was appointed war secretary, was in December, 1937, when he secured the retirement of Sir I. J. Deverell, chief of staff, together with many other members of the general staff, and replaced them in defiance of seniority by men a decade younger. He himself appointed Gen. Viscount Gort to his exalted position.

Soviet to Finish Baltic-Black Sea Canal in April

Copyright by New York Times

Moscow, Jan. 9.—The newspaper Pravda publishes an announcement today to the effect that the Dnieper-Bug Canal, now under construction in the western part of White Russia, must be completed by April 15, 1940.

The completion of this canal will connect the Black Sea with the Bay of Danzig, via the Dnieper, Bug and Vistula rivers, and will permit oil, salt and other important commodities to be transported over this waterway.

Between now and April 15, eight locks, nine dams and 25 kilometers of canal and other structures must be built, not to mention the construction of 4,000,000 cubic meters of embankment.

Robinson Elected Breeders' Unit Head

Winchester, Va., Jan. 9.—Albert Robinson, of Clearbrook, this county, was elected president of the Shenandoah Valley Polled Shorthorn Breeders Association at a meeting held recently in Woodstock.

Harry McCann, of Winchester, was named secretary-treasurer and Ernest Boyer, of Waterlick, Va., was made vice president. The association decided to hold a sale of breeding stock in Winchester on April 19, and appointed McCann, Rominson and J. C. Reynolds, of Shenandoah County, to select the stock to be offered.

Carrying Charges

By Ernest K. Lindley

The Key To The Nation's Debt

THE MOST SIGNIFICANT figure in the budget, to me, is the cost of paying interest on the national debt. Last year it was $940,000,000. This fiscal year, the President estimates, it will be $1,050,000,000.

The cost of paying interest is the most accurate absolute measurement of the weight of the Federal debt. This year this cost is rising above $1,000,000,000.

Think of it! For interest alone, $1,050,000,000! About $8 for each man, woman and child in the United States. This is a lot for the taxpayer to have to put up just for interest. (It is also a lot to receive. Every dollar put up by taxpayers for interest is paid out to the bondholders. One billion dollars plus is a lot of money, either way, whether you are paying it or receiving it. It is no larger on the paying side than on the receiving side.)

Nevertheless, the cost of the interest payments—the cost of carying the debt—is what I, as a taxpayer, am interested in. The carrying charges are part of the operating cost of the Government. They have to be paid when they come due. The debt itself does not have to be paid. It can be refunded. When current receipts exceed current operating costs there will be a surplus, which may be used to reduce the debt.

Mellon Preferred To Reduce Taxes

BUT THE DEBT does not have to be reduced; we can just keep on paying interest on it indefinitely. This is the way it has been done by the British, whose name and customs stand for financial orthodoxy. It has been many a long year since the British government has made any effort to reduce its internal debt. For more than a century the British national debt has been going up—in wartime, by leaps and buonds. During that period the British have never had a severe inflation. Their worst was during the World War, and it was about as severe as ours during the same period.

Even Andrew W. Mellon did not think it necessary to pay off our national debt. While he was Secretary of the Treasury it was reduced, partly by cashing in on assets the Government had acquired during the World War, partly by an excess of tax revenues over current expenses. During the twenties the entire Federal debt could have been paid off without hurting anybody. But instead, Mellon preferred to reduce taxes. As a result, the debt was not paid off. Many people, including myself, thought he and Presidents Coolidge and Hoover, and Congress, made a serious mistake. Nevertheless, Mellon showed by his actions that he did not consider it important to pay off the national debt when it could have been paid off easily.

What is most interesting (or, if you prefer, most alarming) about the rise in the cost of carrying the national debt above $1,000,000,000 is this: It has happened only twice before in our history. The first time was in 1919-1920, while Carter Glass was Secretary of the Treasury. The second time was in 1923, while Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury.

1920 Debt Interest Hit Billion Mark

THE COST of carrying the national debt—its weight on the back of the taxpayer—was $1,020,000,000 for the fiscal year 1920. The next year it was $999,000,000, higher than it has been at any time under Roosevelt up to this year. In 1922 it was $992,000,000, still above the Roosevelt record up to now. In 1923 it jumped up to the all-time high of $1,056,000,000.

Maybe my memory is faulty, but I can't recall anybody complaining about the back-breaking burden of the national debt during those years 1919-23. Especially not in 1923. There was a round of applause, I believe, when Mellon finally got this burden safely below $1,000,000,000, the point which Roosevelt is just coming up to after several years of the loudest wailing about a back-breaking burden which has ever been heard from a supposedly sturdy people.

When Carter Glass and Andrew Mellon were in the Treasury, the burden was more nearly back-breaking, of course, because we had fewer backs to support it. Our population was smaller. Also, during some of those years our national income—measured in dollars—was smaller.

Debt Weight Cut Since Hoover Era

THIS BRINGS US to the truest measurement of all of the weight of the Federal debt—the carrying charges in relation to ability to carry them (our national income).

On March 3, 1933, the day Herbert Hoover left the Presidency, the cost of carrying the Federal debt was about 1.77 cents out of each dollar of the national income. In his current budget message President Roosevelt gives his predecessor a "break." He takes the income for the calendar year 1933, which was somewhat higher than for 1932 and early 1933, and uses the debt on June 30, 1933. This works out at 1.63 per cent of the national income for 1933.

In 1939, interest on the Federal debt took only 1.45 per cent of the national income. In other words, the weight of the debt had decreased since Hoover left office. The total debt was much larger, the interest payments were somewhat larger. But our ability to pay—our national income—had increased so much that the debt is now lighter. If it is back-breaking now, what was it 20 years ago when Carter Glass was Secretary of the Treasury, 15 years ago when Andrew Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury and Calvin Coolidge was President, and 7 years ago when Herbert Hoover sat in the White House.

Shoe Workers Reject Unions By Wide Margin

Johnson City, N. Y., Jan. 9 (AP).—Employes of the Endicott Johnson Corporation overwhelmingly refused union representation today in the second largest election ever conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

Russell Miller, NLRB field representative, said 15,831 of approximately 17,000 shoe workers in factories in Binghamton, Johnson City, Endicott and Owego, N. Y., ballotted—12,693 of them against representation by any union.

The A. F. L.-affiliated Boot and Shoe Workers Union polled 1,612 votes and the C. I. O.-affiliated United Shoe Workers of America 1,079. Challenges were made on 403 ballots and 44 were spoiled.

Running The War

By Barnet Nover

The Civil Power And The Military Arm

IT HAS BEEN said again and again during recent months that when war comes in at the door democracy flies out of the window. And superficially a good deal of proof can be adduced in support of this gloomy contention.

After all, war is a totalitarian enterprise, which tends to engage all the physical and spiritual resources of a nation and absorb all the energies of the people. That is why in the belligerent countries, democratic and dictatorial alike, the current conflict has resulted in an increasing degree of regimentation with the individual more and more only a helpless cog in an all-powerful machine. That is true of France and Great Britain. It is clearly true of Germany, where even the pretense of democracy was thrown overboard years ago.

YET THERE remains even in wartime a fundamental difference between such countries as Germany and Great Britain which must never be lost to sight.

In Great Britain—as in France—the concentration of power in the hands of the government came about by common consent and remains voluntary in its continuance. In those countries certain liberties have been suspended; they have not been destroyed. The result is that the government's responsibility to the people for the conduct of the war remains a real and vital aspect of the national scene.

Proof of this is to be found in the tremendous clamor that has arisen in Great Britain over the forced resignation of Leslie Hore-Belisha, the secretary for war and a man responsible for many far-reaching reforms in British army administration.

ASIDE from inner government circles in Great Britain, and the man directing the destinies of the British army, no one knows precisely what differences arose to bring about this development.

Premier Chamberlain may have been right in taking the stand he did or he may have committed a bad blunder. The reason for the flare-up over Hore-Belisha's resignation is not that critics of the government necessarily assume that Hore-Belisha is sacrosanct or that Mr. Chamberlain did not have good reasons for pursuing the course he did. It is the feeling that somehow the premier gave way to the pressures of the military, and thus tended to undermine a fundamental feature of British democracy—the civil control of military affairs.

This belief finds substantiation in the replacement of Hore-Belisha by Oliver Stanley, whose principal qualifications for the war office post are hereditary rather than technical. Stanley is the son of the seventeenth Earl of Derby, who made a mediocre war secretary during the World War. There was another Earl of Derby who was Disraeli's war secretary.

Stanley's appointment suggests that the control of military affairs is to be left to the technicians headed by Sir Edmund Ironside, the chief of the imperial general staff, and Viscount Gort, commander of the British army in France. This possibility the British people do not relish, however great their admiration and respect for these excellent soldiers may be.

THE HISTORY of democratic nations at war has tended to confirm the popular democratic belief that civilian control of military affairs is essential to national welfare.

Germany's experience in the World War, when Hindenburg and Ludendorff exercised a military dictatorship; Japan's experience with an army which the civil government has never been able to restrain for more than a brief period, only confirm that deep-seated view.

On the other hand, there are also many cases where the civilian control of military affairs had a deleterious effect on the conduct of war.

GREAT BRITAIN, during the first World War, provides examples of both tendencies.

Lord Kitchener, who was secretary of war for the better part of two years, offers an example of a military man incapable of divorcing his military viewpoint from consideration of problems of national policy.

Lloyd George, during his period of supreme power, constantly interfered with the military, and not always to good effect. He overrode the advice of Haig and Robertson in favoring the plan advocated by Gen. Nivelle of a far-reaching offensive on the Western Front in 1917. That offensive bled France white and brought the Allies to the very lowest point in their fortunes.

Yet Lloyd George, brilliant amateur that he was, also forced through some useful schemes over the protests of the generals.

IN A VERY timely article on "Civilian Control of Military Policy" in the current issue of Foreign Affairs, Lindsay Rogers makes the excellent point that a cabinet minister "must be more than the uncomprehending mouthpiece of a chief of staff or war lord." As Clemenceau said, "war is much too important a business to be left to the soldiers." Yet neither can it be left wholly to the civilians.

Statesmen and soldiers must complement each other. War is more than fighting. It is a national enterprise, the most comprehensive of all national enterprises. And that is precisely why the Hore-Belisha affair, involving as it does not only great questions of policy but the central question of control of the military forces in wartime, is of such tremendous importance. That they so clearly realize this fact is proof that the war has not weakened the political instincts of the British people.

Ingram Welcomes New Pastor

City Religious Leaders Join in Reception for The Rev. F. J. Bishop

Washington religious leaders last night joined with members of Ingram Memorial Congregational Church in welcoming a "Bishop" as new pastor.

He was the Rev. Frederick J. Bishop, who with Mrs. Bishop got a rousing reception from 300 parishioners and many visitors in the church at Tenth street and Massachusetts avenue northeast.

Presenting greetings on behalf of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association, World Sunday School Association and Central "Y," Page McK. Etchison said he "prayed for a long, happy and successful pastorate for Mr. Bishop at Ingram Church."

After greetings from Dr. George A. Ackerly, assistant pastor of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, and Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, First Congregational pastor; Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden welcomed Mr. and Mrs. Bishop on behalf of the Washington Federation of Churches, of which he is president.

Other speakers included Dr. D. Butler Pratt, former dean of the Howard University School of Religion; the Rev. Paul W. Yinger, pastor of Cleveland Park Congregational Church; the Rev. J. Harold Mumper, Keller Memorial Lutheran Church; the Rev. Clarence H. Corkran, Douglas Memorial Methodist Church; the Rev. Clifton K. Ray, Epworth Methodist Church; the Rev. Alfred E. Barrows, Eastern Presbyterian Church, and Robert Middleton, assistant superintendent of the Ninth Street Christian Church Sunday school.

Henry T. Richards, teacher of the O. H. Ingram bible class, presided, and Mrs. Emil G. Kaiser handled arrangements.

There was music by Mrs. Lorena Entwisle and Frank Wright, soloists, and the church choir, with Victor H. Neal as accompanist.

The Once Over

War Conversation

Mr. Stalin (quite confused)—Where am I?

Hitler—You mean "where are we?"

Chamberlain—You boys should not have any trouble getting your bearings; you planned it this way.

Mussolini (sarcastically)—That's what they thought!

Hitler (to Stalin)—I thought you had an army.

Stalin—So did I.

Hitler—The secret of victory is a swift powerful attack, a terrific body blow. Why didn't you do just as I did in Poland?

Stalin—There were no Finns in Poland.

Chamberlain (wearily)—I wish you would stop arguing; I want a little peace.

Both—A little is all you'll get.

Chamberlain—Oh, I dunno; I'm not doing so badly.

Hitler—And you're not doing so good, either.

Mussolini—You're all terrible. Do you know what I'd do if I was in this war?

All—No, and we probably never will.

Mussolini—Look at me. I don't pay any attention to war.

Hitler—I don't know whether to trust you or not.

Mussolini—The feeling is mutual, Adolf.

Chamberlain—As I recall things, Adolf, you were going to have this war over in no time. It was to be done in one mighty blow.

Hitler—Can't you wait?

Chamberlain—I can; but can you?

Stalin—What's worrying me is what those Finns have that I haven't got.

Hitler—They haven't a thing, and it's time you found it out.

Mussolini—Will you all keep quiet, please.

All—What for?

Mussolini—I'm trying to map out a policy.

Hitler—You and I mapped out a policy last summer.

Mussolini—Things are a lot different now.

Hitler—You're telling me!

Daladier—Do I hear people talking?

Hitler—Have you been asleep all through this?

Daladier—Why not? You've done nothing to keep me awake.

Stalin (to Hitler)—Are you going to stand for a crack like that, comrade?

Hitler (wincing)—Don't call me comrade.

Stalin—Listen, you called me comrade first. Have you forgotten?

Hitler—I wish I could!

'Swanee River' Paints A Sympathetic Picture

'Story of Stephen C. Foster' Not Malignant; Civic's Sunday Openings Made Permanent This, That and the Other About the Theater

BELL

WHEN THE NATURE of the "story of Stephen C. Foster" which forms the basis of the Twentieth Century-Fox Technicolor production of "Swanee River," coming to the screen at Loew's Palace Theater on Friday, began to filter through to the public many weeks ago, acute fears were felt by many admirers of the great composer of American folk songs lest his character be besmirched. It was feared that his addiction to liquor would be treated in such a flagrant way as to stamp him as a deliberate and vicious drinker, unworthy of the adulation that has been bestowed upon his memory through three-quarters of a centruy. A preview screening of the picture yesterday afternoon seemed to put this understandable anxiety at rest.

The character of Foster in this subject, which so skillfully frames the most enduring of his melodies, is a wholly sympathetic one. He was not the eager instrument of a master vice, but the pathetic and unwilling victim of an unconquerable weakness. It is, of course, a doubtful tribute that he was unable to master the circumstances that brought his life to an end in penury, but I doubt that any spectator will leave the picture with anything but a feeling of pity for its central character.

The final sequences of the film, in fact, have been so contrived as to strike a deeply emotional note. There were fewer dry eyes than damp in the projection room yesterday when the lights came up after the final fadeout on the first public performance of the song that gives the picture its name. Audiences—especially case-hardened critical ones—generally do not cry over the demise of an abhorrent character.

A good many dramatic and historical liberties have been taken with these concluding scenes, but that will be gone into at a later date. The single purpose of these remarks, set down a scant two hours after leaving the screening room, is to assure those who may have been in doubt that their feelings will not be outraged by "Swanee River," insofar as its treatment of Stephen Foster is concerned. If anything, the picture softens some of the less pleasant facts of life.

The board of governors of the Washington Civic Theater yesterday made known that the Sunday night openings of its new production will be made permanent. The experimental Sunday openings of "Merrily We Roll Along" and "Awake and Sing" proved so successful that no alternative seemed to be left but to make the policy a continuing one. Edgar Wallace's "Criminal at Large," the Civic's next offering of the season, will open next Sunday night at Wardman Park, advance reservations already indicating a large and brilliant house. It is reported that a number of socially prominent W s h i n g t o n i a n s have planned d'nner parties to precede the 8:40 curtain.

There still seem to remain a few points that need to be cleared up in the public mind regarding the premiere of "Gone With the Wind" at Loew's Palace, on Friday, January 26. The first is that the picture will not open that Friday with a single, gala evening, reserved seat performance, but will be shown first at 10 a. m., and again at 2:30 p. m., on that day. Doors will be open at 9 a. m. The 10 a. m., and 2:30 p. m., performances being unreserved, it will be possible for late comers to the first to remain over into the second. This will not be true evenings or Sunday matinees, when all seats will be reserved.

These same general rules will apply in the case of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," opening on Monday, January 22, at RKO-Keith's, except that there will be four unreserved presentations daily and Sunday matinees will not be reserved. So now you know.

Not too much has been said about it, but that condensed version of "Th Desert Song" Production Manager Harry Anger has had in the back of his mind for so long, is coming up at the Earle Theater this Friday. Contrary to usual practice in such cases, every song number in the original score will be heard in the compressed version. It is the book that is being skeletonized, not the entrancing music. This should be good news to another segment of the music-loving public that may have been skeptical.

The consensus seems pretty general that Ruth Selwyn and the Shuberts "have something" in "Three After Three," which opened its Washington engagement in the National Monday night. The frolicsome bit of feather-light foolery has not as yet been whipped into final shape—what with converting "a play with music" into a full-fledged musical comedy since its opening in Boston—but it definitely is on its way. One hurried, early-morning reviewer—the last curtain wasn't down Monday night until something like 11:35—is wondering how he managed to avoid mentioning Mitzi Green's impersonation of Katharine Hepburn along with those of Garbo and Fannie Brice. It is the best one she does. But don't go to "Three After Three' expecting to encounter the all-time musical comedy classic, because you won't find it. What you will find, if you can let yourself loose, is a lot of fun, some catchy tunes and some whizbang dancing. This ought to be enough.

Pandro S. Berman, whose name long has appeared on the main titles of all RKO-Radio feature pictures, as production chief, has joined the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executive personnel as a producer. Berman resigned from RKO-Radio on December 15 and promptly went on a needed and well-earned vacation. With an eye to the main chance for a "breather," he will not assume his new duties at M-G-M until that vacation has run its length.

The less lucky still continue to learn that there is no rest for the weary. Vivien Leigh, fresh from her laurels as Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone, etc.," has reported to the M.-G.-M. wardrobe and make-up departments for tests preliminary to her stellar appearance in "Waterloo Bridge"—her first since the Margaret Mitchell item for David O. Selznick.

A High Kick Led to Same Sort of Pay

Geneva Sawyer Proves One in a Thousand Among Dancing Girls

By Frederick C. Othman.

United Press Hollywood Correspondent.

Hollywood, Jan. 9.—There are at least 1,000 dancing girls in Hollywood.

"And I don't know how they live, particularly when they're married to dancing boys," Miss Geneva Sawyer, who used to be a dancing girl, reported today. Miss Sawyer, 26, and who earns a salary measured in the hundreds per week, is the movies' only feminine dance director.

How she achieved that position, while her 1,000 sisters remain on the verge of starvation, makes one of those stories it does you good to hear. And it's the same old story—about hard work, perseverance and a little luck.

The average girl who dances for the movies works hard, all right, but usually she doesn't kick any higher than necessary and often her mind is so busy over her personal troubles she continues to be a dancing girl, working only infrequently, until finally she isn't as young as once she was—and she becomes a movie extra, at an average wage of around $900 a year.

Could Kick Highest

Five years ago, Miss Sawyer arrived fresh upon the Hollywood scene, 21 years old, pretty, and one of the highest kickers of them all.

Dancing girls were in demand. Every studio was making big—and dull—musicals. So Miss Sawyer had no trouble finding work.

She danced so well that Twentieth Century-Fox put her under contract as a stock girl. That meant that she earned $75 a week, but that her options came up every six months. Literally thousands of girls have had contracts like hers—and lasted as actresses exactly six months.

But Miss Sawyer worked harder than ever before. And one day she found herself doing a blackface dance in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," one of Shirley Temple's earlier efforts. Shirley's dancing coach then was black Bill Robinson.

Robinson, still perhaps the world's greatest tap dancer, had a vaudeville tour coming up, and he had to recommend a new dancing coach for La Temple. He gave Miss Sawyer the nod. She went on from there.

Men Are Problem

Three years ago she was made assistant dance director and a year later the "assistant" was removed from her title. So now when anybody does any dancing in a picture at Fox Miss Sawyer is on the sidelines, showing him how.

The best dancers on the lot, she said, are the Misses Temple, Jane Withers and Alice Faye.

"But the men are a problem," she said. "Tyrone Power is getting better. He's been taking lessons, and in 'Dance with the Devil' he does the rumba with Dorothy Lamour.

"Then there's Don Ameche. He has all the makings of a good dancer, but you can't get him on the dance floor. He refuses to dance even when the picture calls for it. He makes them change the script. I think he's self-conscious."

She said she thought any man who wasn't crippled and didn't learn to dance, at least passably well, wasn't thoroughly civilized. And furthermore, she said, he misses out on a lot of fun.

Old Trouper

Sixteen-year-old Jimmy Lydon, who plays the lead in a forthcoming drama of youth and race horses, "Two Thoroughbreds," has a brilliant theatrical career behind him, his shows including "Happiest Days" and "Sing Out the News."

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Chicago, Jan. 9 (INS).—There's more than meets the eye to the supposedly casual New York vacation trip of Brian Aherne and Joan Fontaine. On January 25, Brian and Cornelia Otis Skinner start rehearsals on "Beaux Stratagem" in which they'll not only costar, but will play the financial "angels" of the production as well. This won't be a new play venture for Brian, since he did it several times on the stage in London before he came to Hollywood.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Interesting also to hear that if Joan Fontaine regains her strength, for she has been far from a well girl, she will appear with her groom and Miss Skinner in their play venture, which opens February 18 in Princeton, N. J. Several of my amateur preview critics have sent me glowing comments about Joan's performance in "Rebecca," and there's no doubt that she's no longer merely Olivia de Havilland's little sister.

My old friend Ralph Wheelwright's picture, "Thunder Afloat," made so much money for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer they looked around in a hurry for another submarine picture and found it in "Port of Hope." Not only will this yarn by Gina Kaus and Ladislaus Fedor give them a chance to capitalize on the submarine excitement in the newspaper headlines, but there's a swell chance Robert Taylor's previously scheduled "Flight Command" may be postponed for him to make "Port of Hope." Also since "Escape" is not ready for Ilona Massey (she's to play the countess), the beautiful blonde will co-star with Bob if Producer Joe Mankiewicz gets his way about putting "Port of Hope" into immediate production.

Good news that Clair. Trevor is getting along so nicely that she can report to Republic to complete "Dark Command" February 1. Claire's long and serious illness is said to have added $250,000 to the cost of the picture, although I fin such a big amount hard to believe. In the meantime, the doctors have ordered a rest of from six to eight weeks for the little Trevor when she finishes "Dark Command" before allowing her even to talk about "The Woman Commands" (an old Pola Negri hit) at RKO.

Chatter in Hollywood: Hollywood reporters, taken completely unaware by the elopement of Bill Powell and Diana Lewis, aren't taking any more chances. The most sizzling rumor of the week-end was that Olivia de Havilland and Jimmy Stewart had chartered a plane for Las Vegas and were pulling a surprise elopment of their own. Poor Jimmy or Olivia couldn't get a moment of peace at their respective homes with all the telephone calls checking up. Both deny marriage plans vehemently—but if I were you, I wouldn't sell this particular romance "short" as they say in the financial marts.

Snapshots of Hollywood and Chicago collected at random: Margot Stevenson and Carry Grant a new combination at the Beverly Derby; saw Edward Everett Horton, who asked me to run over to see him between shows. Lillian Gish opens in Chicago in the "Life With Father" company and it's interesting that fair-haired Lillian turned down a motion picture for David Wark Griffith to accept this screamingly funny stage play, which is one of Broadway's great hits; haven't had time to run in and see Clifton Webb, who is playing here in "The Man Who Came to Dinner" in the Monty Woolley role.

Andy Devine passed through Chicago en route to Nashville for a personal appearance; had a wire from Laura Hope Crewes, who leaves soon for Palm Beach. She and Frey Brown were guests at a big party Moss Hart gave and it sounded like fun. Joan Crawford was there with Franchot Tone and I'm wondering what Betty Grable is doing—Franchot was really a nightly stage door caller at "Du Barry Was a Lady," until Joan appeared in New York. Helen Hayes also was at the Hart party; hear the Sunday nights at the Troc are as glamorous as ever; Bruce Cabot was there with Mignon Woideman, Los Angeles socialite—Joan Bennett with John McLaine, Ilona Massey, Herbert Marshall and Lee Russell and the Robert Youngs.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Jan. 9.

Helen Hayes' mother, Katherine Brown, missed one of the most dramatic episodes in her daughter's career in her Sateve Post story, "Mary, This Is Your Mother." Years ago Edgar Selwyn wanted to do a picture with Helen, and finally interested Irving Thalberg in her—the latter awed by the financial returns her plays drew to the box office.

HOPPER

He agreed to do a test of her, but Edgar thought it was so dreadful he knew that she'd never get the job if Irving saw that test. So one day, when he insisted, Edgar agreed on one condition—that Thalberg just listen to her voice and keep his eyes shut. He did just that, and as tears streamed down his face kept repeating 'What a voice, what a voice—sign her!"

Then he departed to Baden-Baden fo a rest cure and didn't see Helen on the screen in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet" until he returned—by which time she had gone over to Goldwyn to make "Arrowsmith." Finished with her second picture she finally saw a preview of her first—and was so distressed at what she saw she was carried out of the theater in hysterics and wanted to buy back the picture from M.-G.-M. After the second preview, which she refused to attend, she came on the lot to say good-bye to her friends and ran into Edgar Selwyn. "Thank God the public will see me in 'Arrowsmith' before they'll see me in your rotten picture!" she exclaimed. That "rotten picture" won the Academy Award that year—after which Helen bumped into Edgar Selwyn again, this time in New York. "Hello, Genius!" was her greeting. And they both smiled happily as they shook hands. Which just goes to show you how much two of the biggest people in the industry know about the industry!

Howard Hawks had more than a brainstorm when he switched the dizzy cannonball reporter from male to female in the "Front Page," Rosalind Russell rings the bell. It's neck and neck between Roz and Cary Grant. The newspaper hounds were shown as a milder-mannered crew than we've had in the past, which didn't prevent them from dipping their pens in vitriol as they wrote. Hawks chose stars for his bits. Ernest Truex, Cliff Edwards, Roscoe Karns, Reggie Toomey and Frank Jenks—but Billy Gilbert, as usual, stopped the show with his two scenes. And it should be a happy year for Helen Mack and the whole crew in "His Girl Friday."

The surprise elopement of William Powell and Diana Lewis, a stock girl at the studio, not only knocked the praise boys feet off their desks, but astonished Don Barry. For up to a month ago he was Diana's steady and thought everything was honkey-dooley between them. Now he'll have to concentrate on coproducing and acting in Dalton Trumbo's stage version of "Johnny Got His Gun" which will be directed by Bill Bacher— and let love wait . . . P. S.—Bill Powell has nothing to do with the title of the first picture his new wife will do with Eddie Canton: "40 Little Mothers!"

Melvyn Douglas is sorry he permitteid himself to be dressed in women's clothes for "Too Many Husbands" because he's had requests for the femme fineries he wore in that role from six collegiate groups, including Radcliffe, Vassar, Smith, University of California and Washington University.

And for the first time in history the annual d'Orsay—Screen Book Award for the best groomed woman in the world goes to a movie personality instead of a society lass—the winner being Marlene Dietrich . . .

When I asked Alex Woollcott if he'd make "The Man Who Came to Dinner" into a movie, he said: "Don't be silly. I was working too hard and getting too little. That's why I quit radio. You're crazy for doing it, Heddy. You can have much more fun by getting in your car and touring from town to town and making a fool of yourself nightly before a lot of strangers, who, strange to say, might learn to adore you!" . . . Alex has only one idiocyncrasy. He resents interviews that spell his name incorrectly, and for emphasis issues these instructions: "Two oo's, two l's, two t's and TWO CHINS!"

Travel Light If You Take South Plane

Heavy Baggage Means Extra Charge, Expert Warns Women

By Marshall Adams
The Post Food Editor.

Marshall Adams

ARE you planning to fly South this month? To dash from Washington's cold and snow in 6¾ hours flat to bask in Florida's sunshine? If so, heed a few words of caution from one of America's recognized air travel authorities on the clothes you'll take with you, the luggage you'll pack them in and the accessories you'll leave at home.

Our informant, Patricia O'Malley, chief of the editorial section of the Civil Aeronautics Commission, says that as women become more air minded they grow more sensible about the baggage they take with them. But they still must learn to distinguish etween necessities and unessentials in clothing. Accessories and junk jewelry are the worst offenders in taking up luggage space and

Avoid Many Accessories

"Even though amusing and massive jewels and oversized handbags often 'make' a costume," Miss O'Malley says "put them behind you as though they were Satan if you would stay within your luggage quota." Forty pounds is the usual amount of luggage permitted passengers, anything over that necessitating additional payment.

Next to heavy and superfluous accessories, Miss O'Malley cautioned against taking too many shoes along. They weigh more than any other single object, sports or golf shoes usually scaling a full pound. For the average week's stay in Florida, three pairs of shoes are ample. One pair for all-around wear, one for evening. The more open-worked they are, the less they weigh, sandals being a real godsend to weight-watchers. The third pair is the one you'll wear and it can be sturdy as you like for travel and active sportswear after you leave the plane.

One swim suit and three daytime dresses are sufficient for a week's resort lounging. The more lightweight and crush-resistant these are the less trouble after you unpack them, of course. One good evening frock in chiffon or anti-crease processsed net or lace is really ample, especially if it has a dinner jacket over a formal evening gown for double-duty wear. Gowns with very full skirts take up much space.

Turbans and ribbon hats are boons to the flyer, but heavy leather hat boxes are anathema to her luggage restrictions. They may be good to look at but so are the smart cardboard ones which take up far less poundage. Miss O'Malley suggests one wardrobe bag with dress hangers and a smaller companion piece or the larger bag and a hat box in which night things can be tucked away.

Air Travelers Need These Lightweight Clothes

Whether you're buying clothes for air travel South or picking out the cream of resort crops now for spring wear, consider well these classic shirtwaist frocks, processed against hard wear and creases. The boldly plaided dress at left is of cool rice cloth in a delectable new mint green. The dress to wear to the airport when returning home from a week in the South is of black and white coin-dotted crepe with a double belt of white calf and red corduroy to match the jacket

Reducers Told Not to Exercise After Meals

By Ida Jean Kain

THERE are more Spartan souls in this world than I had suspected! Here I've been taking it for granted that nothing would make you snuggle down into the blankets like the thought of getting up to exercise.

But when I wrote not long ago that exercise before breakfast is no longer wholeheartedly recommended, reducer after reducer immediately demanded to know what was wrong with it!

One of the neatest arguments for it was as follows: "I have long hair. It hurts my head and disaranges my hair to roll after the hairpins are in. Why isn't it all right to exercise before breakfast?"

Well, if you like exercise before breakfast and it sets you up for the day, then it is probably fine for you!

Morning exercise is not good when used to stimulate a tired body. Nor should cold morning showers be used for this purpose. What the person who wakes up tired needs is more rest—not stimulation. One of the troubles with this age is our tendency to drive ourselves too hard.

But none of this means that you shouldn't exercise before breakfast. Exercise started easily has a wholesome effect on the respiration, elimination and digestion. Just make sure that you allow enough time for relaxing between each movement. You can't relax properly when you are in a hurry. And get up a little earlier so that you won't have to cut your breakfast short.

The times when you should not exercise are immediately after eating and when you are physically very tired. Exercise depresses the gastric secretions and brings about a redistribution of the blood. Taken right after eating, it interferes with the digestion. It is advisable to wait at least an hour after meals.

The Gentler Sex

By MALVINA LINDSAY

The Important Wife

(In response to popular request, Mrs. Aurelia Puffer Swagg, world famous authority on "Front," has resumed her series of catechisms on "How to Be Important.")

Q—What is one of the first things for the wife of a man who is important—or who is hoping to become important—to remember?

A—She should first of all remember to play safe.

Q—What is the first rule in playing safe?

A—Rule No. 1 is to indulge in nothing but innocuous conversation.

Q—How is this done?

A—This is done by never discussing anything—even with one's most intimate friends—except the weather, antiques, children's ailments, archeology, bridge, china painting, knitting or Balinese culture.

Q—May not clothes be discussed?

A—Possibly. Though there is always the chance that one's opinion on this subject may have repercussions.

A—What topics should the wife of an important man particularly avoid?

A—She should at all cost avoid any mention of politics, religion, war, geography, modern history, gossip, travel, and any reference to human beings, particularly members of her own family.

Q—Can she not discuss food?

A—Yes, it is all right occasionally to refer to her husband's favorite dishes, provided they are sufficiently simple and folksy.

Q—What is the unforgivable social sin of the important wife?

A—To have a sense of humor—or at least to reveal it.

Q—What is her worst social pitfall?

A—Giving voice to a bon mot that may be quoted against her.

Q—What is her next worst social pitfall?

A—Expressing an opinion on any subject.

Q—How should the important wife dress?

A—She should be modishly—but not too modishly—dressed and she should be faultlessly groomed.

Q—What should be her social attitude?

A—She should develop a dead pan face, but an occasional pleasant smile, so that society writers can refer to her as "gracious."

Q—Should she remember names and faces?

A—Yes—if her husband is running for office; no—if he is already elected.

Q—Should the important wife attend social events?

A—Yes, the right social events. Large gatherings are the safest, as these do not call for coherent conversation, though small exclusive events are also safe if they are given by the right people.

Q—What kind of social gatherings should she avoid?

A—She should avoid the small, informal gatherings of old friends who knew her when.

Q—How should she handle her old hometown friends?

A—She should painlessly and gradually ease them out of her life.

Q—What kind of people should she cultivate as friends?

A—She should cultivate the Right People.

Q—How can she tell who are the Right People?

A Right Person is someone with either money or position—preferably both, who is a little on the dull side in personality.

Q—How does the important wife spend her days?

A—In a round of harmless social events. She may, if she wishes, be a patron of charity benefits, but she must never serve as a member of a committee, or under any circumstances espouse a cause.

Q—What is the ultimate reward of the Important Wife?

A—Her ultimate reward is to pour tea at large social functions, to receive corsages at public dinners, to be invited to luncheons and banquets at which her husband is a speaker, to occupy the best platform or reserved seats at civic dedications, parades, visits of royalty, political conventions, etc., and to be pointed out as the wife of the important Mr. So and So.

Next Week—The Important Deb.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Asks Midshipman to Pose as Her Fiance To Reassure Her Parents; Should He Oblige?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The past summer I spent several weeks in Washington, chiefly in the company of a girl who works for the Government. We were in no way intimate, but enjoyed each other's company, having a general good time. She is several years older than I, comes from some Middle Western State, and made an interesting—though not special—friend.

Our relationship ended in August when I went home on annual leave from the Naval Academy, and I heard no more from her until shortly before Christmas, when she wrote me a note asking me to call her if I should be in Washington during the holidays. Since my home is in the Far West, I usually spend my vacations in Washington, so I wrote back that I would see her during my stay.

I went around to her apartment the fourth day of leave and was surprised to be greeted in a decidedly grave manner. After the usual preliminary remarks, she informed me that she had something to confess. Her story, in short, was this: In September she had become involved in a brief intimacy with some fellow, and although she soon stopped seeing him, she found that the results of their intimacy were not to be so easily dismissed.

She obtained a 20-days' leave of absence and went home, where by some means she persuaded a doctor to come to her aid. In some way which she didn't explain, her parents learned of her trouble and of course were insistent on knowing the man. Although she is 26, she seems still to be subordinate to her parents' wishes, so rather than confess she had been just plain indiscreet (in which case they would have insisted that she resign her job and stay home), she devised a plausible story involving me.

She told them we were secretly engaged and had foolishly committed this one indiscretion, but that it would not happen again. Supposedly we are to be married after I have finished at the Academy and have spent the required two years additional with the fleet. I naturally inquired as to why the long interval between her story to them and confession to me. She replied that she had seen no need to worry me, until she discovered her parents were thinking of writing me a letter. They had asked for my address and she had tried her best to lead them away from the idea, but was still afraid they might. In the event they did write, she wanted me to know what it was all about and to answer them with some misleading letter.

I told her I was not very joyous over the fake role in which I had been cast, and that I would not be drawn further into the affair. I suggested that she tell them the truth and go on living her own life; but after due talk she halfway convinced me that I had nothing to lose in supporting her story, in case her parents wrote me. Before leaving, I told her that I would at least get in touch with her if they wrote me, to talk over what should be done.

After thinking it over for a week, I can't say that I've reached any conclusions. No letter has come from her parents, but in case one should, I'd like to have some advice on what to do. Undoubtedly the safe and logical thing to do would be to tell them the truth, or in some way force her to do it. On the other hand, I wouldn't mind helping her if I could be sure it was worthwhile aid.

She says that everything can be easily smoothed over in the next couple of years, with no trouble to me. But I'm hardly in a position to become involved in any such story, even though it could be easily disproven. Inasmuch as the affair is not mine to be carried, I would like your advice, which I shall accept, whatever it may be. Sincerely,

W. F. D.

Bland Falsifier Cannot Be Trusted

DEAR W. F. D.: Even assuming that you are telling me a straight story, the question still remains as to whether the girl's recital is based on fact. It may be an elaborate falsification designed to impress herself indelibly upon your imagination; to lay the groundwork for a dramatic conspiracy between you two that she hopes may lead, eventually, to that very betrothal which is the leitmotif of her alleged fictional alibi.

However, let's assume, further, that her story is true, so far as the interrupted pregnancy, subsequent parental grilling, etc., are concerned. In that case, the fact that she named you as "the man," might well be construed as significantly wishful thinking (even though she might argue, from the surface of her mind, that your name alone—because of the summer's association—could support her pretensions to emotional integrity).

Or it could be that, after having impetuously employed you as a shield, she became imaginatively involved with the story she had invented—to such an extent that she has felt driven by irresistible compulsion to bring you into the picture actually. This might explain her unabashed insistence on your standing by as a make-believe fiance for the next two years—since there is no literal justification for the tedious and potentially damaging imposition.

In any event, she is not to be trusted—as witness her bland falsehood to her parents, plus her callous disregard for the possibly punitive consequences of that falsehood to yourself. In your position, it is imperative that you be—like Caesar's wife—not only above reproach, but above suspicion of reproach.

You cannot afford to become the center of quixotic intrigue; nor the butt of lynx-eyed parental investigation, no matter how absurdly unfounded their case-for-inquiry may be. In my opinion, it would be downright dangerous to collaborate with this self-engrossed girl in deceiving her parents—since it is within the realm of possibility that she might attempt to "railroad" you into marriage from that point onward.

My advice to you, therefore, is to respect your first hunch "not to be drawn further into the affair." Let the girl know immediately that this is your final, irrevocable decision—transmitting the message by telephone or in person, if possible. If you must state the decision in writing, do it in words that cannot possibly be misconstrued by other readers. If her parents should question you directly, give them the unvarnished truth—after first serving notice on the girl that such is the course you will follow, if pressed.

Capital Notables by the Dozens Attend Mrs. Garner's Luncheon

Wives of Cabinet Members, Senators And Representatives Throng Hotel For One of Rare Parties Given by Hostess

By Hope Ridings Miller

"WHEN THE GARNERS do break down and have a party—it's always one you remember," said a guest yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs. John Nance Garner, wife of the Vice President.

Marking the season's opening for the Senate Ladies Luncheon Club, the event took place in the sun parlor of the Washington Hotel; drew a record number of Senate hostesses and Cabinet wives, and had all the earmarks of old home week at its gayest.

HOPE R. MILLER

Senate hostesses who haven't seen each other since last session were greeting each other right and left. Broad smiles and political comments in muted tones accented conversation for many groups collected here and there at small tables around the spacious room. Sidelights on the Jackson Day dinner were topics of talk for any number of twosomes and threesomes clustering near the broad windows that presented a pretty picture of snow-covered Washington.

Mrs. Garner, wearing a trim black frock with touches of blue at the throat and a narrow-brimmed black satin hat, received her long line of guests at the door of the of the sun parlor. Standing with her was Mrs. Clara Driscoll, Democratic National Committeewoman from Texas, who came to town for the Jackson Day fete and will leave for her home in Corpus Christi today. Mrs. Driscoll had on a frock of taupe velvet, set off with turquoise ornaments and a taupe turban.

"Well it looks like all wives of Presidential possibilities and possible possibilities are here," said somebody hastily scanning the crowd. "But I don't see Mrs. Roosevelt."

She didn't, because the First Lady, having other fish to fry, was not present at the Garner fete. She was a block down the street at the Willard Hotel lunching with the Women's National Press Club where her speech teacher, Mrs. Elisabeth von Hesse, was giving a free lesson to a flock of newspaper women and their guests.

Cabinet Wives Among Those Present

Five Cabinet hostesses turned out for the Garner party. Mrs. Hull, wearing a handsome raspberry ensemble, was among the early arrivals. Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., in a black frock and a small black hat, trimmed in bright red, came in a few seconds later; and presently, I spotted Mrs. Henry A. Wallace and Secretary of Labor Perkins. Mrs. Charles A Edison was another popular addition to the company.

The luncheon table, centering the room, was decorated with a tall silver vase sprouting pink roses, iris, pink snapdragons and stevia. Guests served there found places wherever they chose at any number of tables scattered about the room. Protocol was forgotten, and an air of informality marked the party.

Tall, stately Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry and Mrs. Warren Austin were centers of a merry group at one end of the room. Mrs. Millard Tydings, in a smart black frock with a white satin vestee and a small veiled turban perched atop her becoming "up" hairdo was at the same table. (Incidentally, the dance she and Senator Tydings gave for Patricia Prochnik and Ellen Bruce, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Bruce, of Baltimore, is one of the most pleasant memories of the holiday whirl.)

Mrs. Borah Holds Court of Her Own

Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, in a bright blue ensemble, chatted with Secretary of Labor Perkins through most of the luncheon. Mrs. William E. Borah kept a whole table of guests entertained from soup to dessert with one amusing story after another. Among those seated with her were Mrs. D. Worth Clark, Mrs. Key Pittman, and Mrs. Elmer Thomas.

At a nearby table Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, in a smart woods green ensemble, sat with Mrs. Love Taylor, Mrs. Robert L. Frederick Gillett, Mrs. Robert Owen, and Mrs. Francis Parkinson Keyes, and several others.

Across the room Mrs. Burton K. Wheeler, Mrs. Charles L. McNary, Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, and Mrs. Alben Barkley were among the familiar faces I picked out of the crowd. Mrs. Ralph K. Chase, sister of Senator Rush Holt, and Mrs. Prew Savory, daughter of Senator John J. Townsend, were seen moving through the throng on the way from the center table back to groups with which they were lunching.

Mrs. Garner, who moved from one table to another between courses, had her dessert with Mrs. Hull, Mrs. Edison, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Driscoll and Mrs. Morris Sheppard.

Mrs. Hugo Black Is Popular Guest

Mrs. Hugo Black, whose husband was in the Senate before he ascended to the Supreme Court, was greeting old friends on all sides. Mrs. Edward Burke was there; as were Mrs. Frederick Van Nuys, Mrs. James F. Byrnes, Mrs. Dennis Chavez, Mrs. William H. Smathers, Mrs. Elbert Thomas, Mrs. Harry Hawes and her daughter, Mrs. Hawes Dunn; Mrs. Nathaniel Dunn, Mrs. John Kendrick, Mrs. William H. King, and many more.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, has cards out for a luncheon on Friday, January 26, in honor of Mrs. William B. Bankhead . . . Oscar Crosby and his daughter, Mrs. Crosby Miller, will be off Monday for Melbourne, Fla., where they will spend two months. . . . Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Murphy have invitations out for a dinner on Friday, January 19 . . . Mr. and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., were in the Mayflower Lounge Monday evening following the Jackson Day dinner, with James H. R. Cromwell, newly named Minister to Canada, and Mrs. Cromwell, and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert. Later, they were joined by Attorney General Frank Murphy, the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison and Mrs. John Hay Whitney . . . From Canada comes word that John Buchan, the author, is reading final proofs on his autobiography which is to be published in the spring, and which will give a detailed account of his career as Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor General of Canada.

Merry Greetings Are in Order

Freshly returned to the Capital, Congressional women had much to talk over at Mrs. John N. Garner's luncheon yesterday. Many Notables Go to Florida

The traffic between here and Florida is gathering impetus, now that the holiday season is over. Shoals of social lights are either returning from a brief "escape" in the South, or are headed in that direction.

The newly appointed Special Assistant to the State Department and Mrs. Joseph Davies returned yestreday from Palm Beach. They have been sunning for ten days at their villa. They have taken the Schaellkopf home on Macomb street for the season. Mr. and Mrs. Davies entertained at a dinner party Monday evening at Mar-a-Lago, before leaving for Washington.

The Naval Attache of the Argentine Embassy and Senora de Godoy have been stopping at the Pancoast Hotel in Miami Beach, where they went to attend the seventh all-American air meet. Lieut. Comdr. F. Massey Hughes, Bureau of Aeronautics, is also at the Pancoast.

The Assistant Postmaster General, Smith W. Purdum, was guest of honor at a luncheon given last Friday with William C. Hill, postmaster of Miami, when the host was Thomas J. Pancoast.

Capt. Brereton, Warren Robbins Arrive on Liner

Capt. William Brereton, Naval Attache at the United States Embassy in Buenos Aires, and Warren Delano Robbins, son of Mrs. Warren Robbins, of Washington, arrived in New York yesterday aboard the liner Argentina.

The passengers reported they had an excellent view of the scuttled Admiral Graf Von Spee at Montevideo. The men took a tug out to view the ship, which was a cloud of smoke, with occasional red glows flaring up from her ruined decks.

The Guimaraes Are Honored at Farewell Dinner

The Charge d'Affaires of Germany and Frau Thomsen were ranking guests at the dinner party last night given in honor of the transferring First Secretary of the Brazilian Embassy and Senhor A Guimaraes by the First Secretary of the German Embassy and Frau Tannenberg.

Senhor Guimaraes, who will become Consul in Vienna, will sail on the S. S. Manhattan with his family January 27 for Genoa, whence they will travel to Vienna.

Guests at the dinner party last night included the Commercial Counselor of the Netherlands Legation and Mme. Kleijn Molekamp, Maj. Robert W. Hasbrouck, U. S. A., and Mrs. Hasbrouck and Mr. and Mrs. Loy Henderson.

Danish Minister And Wife Entertain Lauritz Melchior

Several dinners of interest to Capital society took place last evening, among them that at which the Danish Minister and Mme. de Kauffmann entertained in honor of the famous singer, Lauritz Melchior and Mrs. Melchior. They came here for Mrs. Townsend's musicale on Monday.

Also hosts last night were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hogan. Their honor guests were Mr. and Mrs. Leigh Battson, of Los Angeles. They entertained at their home on Sheridan Circle.

French Attache Sails Saturday

Really going this time, though their departure for France was postponed when they reserved passage several months ago, are the popular Attache of the French Embassy, Count Gabriel de Gramont, and his attractive Countess. They will sail on Saturday from New York on an American liner.

Ever since war broke out the young diplomat has wanted to go fight at the front, and at last his government has given him permission to leave his duties here. He will train first before joining the soldiers in the Maginot Line.

Since their arrival here several years ago, the de Gramonts have been among the most popular members of the Diplomatic Corps, and have been widely feted before their departure.

Tafts Lease Home Of Mrs. Patterson

Senator and Mrs. Robert A. Taft have leased the home of Mrs. Rushmore Patterson at 2501 Massachusetts avenue for the coming season.

Mrs. Patterson has taken an apartment at the Shoreham, where she will remain a month or so before leaving for her home in New York.

Gen. Cox Heads Committee for Jan. 30 Dinner

One of the highlights of the celebration of the President's Birthday will be a reception and dinner to be held at the Willard Hotel the evening of January 30. The reception will start at 6:15 o'clock, to be followed by dinner at 7. Tickets to the dinner, obtainable by invitation only, will be sold at $7.50 apiece.

The dinner committee is headed by Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox. Also on the committee will be many prominent Washintonians, including Mrs. William B. Bankhead, Maj. E. S. Bettleheim, jr., Mrs. Hugo L. Black, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Robert V. Fleming, Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, Mrs. Edward Beale McLean and Mrs. Paul V. McNutt.

Others prominent in the Nation's social life who will serve on the committee include Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, Mrs. J. Bruce Kremer, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Mrs. Charles Warren, L. E. Williams and Lloyd Wilson.

Plan Party Sunday

Mr. and Mrs. Earle Clark Calhoun, Mrs. Dorothy DeMuth Watson and members of the Authors of Books for Children Club have issued invitations to a party on Sunday evening at 1028 Connecticut avenue for the benefit of the Polish Relief Unit of the American Red Cross.

The Hunt Country

Many From Hunt Country to Ride In President's Birthday Horse Show

INTEREST in the President's Birthday Horse Show is running high in the hunt country. Col. George Patton is chairman and Thomas Morgan has charge of boxes for the benefit affair which will be held at Fort Myer the evenings of January 24 and 25. Gene Autry, western movie idol, will be one of the main attractions as he plans to give a riding exhibition.

Among those from nearby Virginia who are expected to ride in the show are Mr. and Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh, Mrs. John Hay Whitney, Mrs. Robert Winmill, Mrs. Dorothy Lee, Mrs. Rigan McKinney and Ernest Redmon.

JACK SKINNER, of Middleburg, for years one of the leading amateur steeplechase riders, is convalescing in Garfield Hospital from an operation.

Mrs. Diana Guest entertained at a cocktail party Sunday afternoon at the Elgin place, which she has leased for the winter.

MR. AND MRS. Pete Porter, of Chicago, who arrived at Middleburg Monday, are staying at Stray Shot, which they have rented for two weeks of foxhunting. To date, however, they have been unable to participate in the sport because of snow.

Mr. and Mrs. John Winston, of Far Hills, N. J., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Harry Duffey for several days.

Mr. and Mrs. Melville Bearns have gone to Florida, where they will occupy their cottage near Miami Beach for the winter.

MRS. WILLIAM B. WATKINS left Monday for Miami Beach to join her sister, Mrs. Carl Boy-Ed, on her boat and will go for a cruise with a party of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Haserick and the latter's daughter, Miss Jane Wilbur, will leave the last of the month for Vera Beach, Fla., where they will be at their cottage until the early spring.

Mr. and Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh, jr., left this week for Toledo after spending the holidays with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Greenhalgh, sr., and Mrs. Burwell Jacobs.

FOX HUNTING has been supplanted by winter sports now that the ground is completely covered with snow. A great many of the younger crowd gathered at the ice pond on Bobby Clark's place for hockey. Every sleigh in the countryside has been pulled down from the hay loft, dusted off, hitched with hunters and decked with sleigh bells. Coasting is another diversion and the road leading to New Ford seems to be the most popular. A hot dog picnic was given there last night when a huge bonfire was built at the foot of the hill.

$100 Jackson Dinner Made Mrs. Edison Sick; Garner's Tails Indicate Bond Street, Not Texas

HIGHLIGHTS of the Jackson Day dinner:

The $100 menu made one person sick—Mrs. Charles Edison, wife of the new Secretary of the Navy. Though up and about yesterday, she said she was feeling wan . . . The guests were assigned table numbers, but could sit at any place they chose. Hence the number of women seated next to each other, contrary to all dinner rules.

Everybody is agreed that, even if Mrs. James Cromwell weren't the richest woman in the country, she still would have been the most stunning there, with her silver fox cape over a satin dress and her diamond pendant earrings. Also much admired was Mrs. Lawrence W. Robert's pale green wool dress with mink tails trimming the neckline, and a green muff to match, also mink-trimmed. And though Vice President Garner gets dressed up only under protest, all the women agreed that he is a dream in tails—that they might have been made by a Bond Street tailor, instead of by a Texan, so well did they fit.

THE FIRST Australian Minister ever appointed to this country, Richard Casey, is one envoy who will dispense with the usual chauffeur. An ardent motorist, he always drives himself.

Tennis and squash are other interests of the new minister, who rowed on the crew at Cambridge. He will bring with him to Washington a charming Mrs. Casey and two very young Caseys, boy and girl. His wife is the daughter of the late Sir Charles Ryan, a distinguished Australian doctor who fought with the Turkish army at Plevna in the Russo-Turkish War years ago.

Mr. Casey started his career as an engineer and visited this country as a businessman for a period of six months in the twenties. He has been back several times since.

At one time he served as Australian representative in London. In 1931 he returned "down under" and was elected to Parliament. He became a member of the cabinet in '33.

Mrs. Casey is said to be clever, gay and goodlooking. Her husband, incidentally, is an old friend of able and popular Keith Officer, Australian Counselor of the British Embassy. They went to school together and served on the same staff in the World War. Mr. Officer says he doesn't know what his fate will be under the new setup—whether he will be switched to the minister or remain at the British Embassy.

ADD TO THE LIST of early summer debs Miss Louise Stillwell, pretty and attractive daughter of Mme. Espil, wife of the Argentine envoy. Now at the French School in New York, she will make her debut at a large reception June 8.

Yesterday the Amabssador and his charming wife were hosts at a pleasant luncheon in honor of Senora de Ezcurra who, with her husband, is visiting Mrs. Peter Augustus Jay. The Argentine visitor spent most of the time looking around at the embassy, where she spent her childhood when her father was Ambassador here from 1911 to 1919. Though it is hard to conceive how anyone could think the Argentine Embassy small, the pretty visitor said it seemed so to her at her first return since those days.

"Though I am more familiar with what used to be my nursery than I am with the drawing room, where I was never allowed," she said yesterday.

THE GUEST OF HONOR wore a black dress with a small white lace collar and a white hat. The hostess was smart in a dark green frock with a little jacket and a diamond and ruby ornament pinned to her lapel. Miss Mary Louise Marsh in black and Mrs. Emmons Smith in a rust-colored suit were the other ladies present.

The men included Ambassador Espil, who knows more about this country than do most Americans; the Marquis de Zahara, counselor of the Spanish Embassy; the New York correspondent of "La Nacion," Buenos Aires newspaper, and, from the Argentine Embassy staff, Ricardo Siri, Adolfo Sellingo and Miguel Quirno-Lavalle.

DIPLOMATIC DOINGS: Lord Lothian, British Ambassador, writes all his own speeches . . . George S. Messersmith says it will be "some time" before he leaves for his new post as Ambassador to Cuba.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

Mrs. Roosevelt entertained at a musicale at the White House yesterday afternoon. There were 320 guests. Artists for the occasion were Angna Enters, who did a number of character sketches, and Webster Aitken, pianist, accompanied by Kenneth Yost.

Lady Lindsay, wife of the former British Ambassador, has returned to her home in Oyster Bay, Long Island, after a stay at the Shoreham.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Langhorne have closed their home on R street and have leased a house in Camden, S. C., for the rest of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Mann Miller, of West Chevy Chase, and their daughter, Miss Edna Mae Miller, are in New York to attend the formal opening of the annual Black and ite Exhibition at the Grant Studios of Art. Mrs. Miller is showing, by invitation, a group of her drawings throughout the rest of the month. Her daughter is a student at the Corcoran School of Art.

Mrs. Edwin C. Brandenburg has closed her home on the Rockville pike and has taken an apartment at the Wardman Park.

Cabinet Hostesses To Hold 'at Homes'

Four Cabinet hostesses will be "at home" this afternoon. Receiving are Mrs. Henry A. Morgenthau, jr., at her home; Mrs. Charles Edison, at the Mayflower Hotel; Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, in her apartment at Wardman Park, and the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, at the Sulgrave Club.

Receiving with Mrs. Morgenthau will be Mrs. Daniel W. Bell, wife of the Undersecretary of the Treasury; Mrs. Herbert E. Gaston, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Mrs. John L. Sullivan, wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Pouring tea will be Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Pat Harrison, Mrs. Daniel A. Reed, Mrs. J. Laurence Houghteling, Mrs. Basil Harris, Mrs. George H. Dern and Miss Anne Squire.

Women of Press Get Public Speaking Lesson

Mrs. Elisabeth von Hesse Directs Scribes, Including Mrs. Roosevelt, at Correct Breathing, Tone Placement, Clear Diction

By Jessie Ash Arndt

The Post Club Editor.

The Women's National Press Club like its most distinguished member, Mrs. Roosevelt, has now studied public speaking with Mrs. Elisabeth von Hesse.

It had its lesson, tossing "T's," rounding "O's" and picking up "P's" yesterday, at its first luncheon of the New Year, in the small ballroom of the Willard Hotel. Both she and her illustrious pupil were guests of honor.

Mrs. von Hesse was the luncheon speaker but she was unwilling to monopolize the role. After a few explanations, she started the women scribes on the straight and narrow path of correct breathing, tone placement and clear diction, designed to disprove the charge that the United States is "a nation of mumblers and squawkers."

Pointing out that a friendly, warm tone was the goal, she remarked: "I am a Republican, but if Mr. Roosevelt would speak just before time to vote, I should always vote for him."

Her own voice was modulated, musical, unstudied and natural. She was a woman of middle age, with gray hair and glasses and was simply gowned in a black tailored dress and a gray hat trimmed in swirls of bright coq feathers. There were no frills about the speaker or her speech. Even had one not understood her words, it would have been a pleasure to hear her. But one did understand!

Most Voices Pitched Too High, She Says

"We have become a listening America," she said. "And we don't like what we hear. Each person must build a speech pattern. We must learn to listen. Our carelessness is not in speech but in listening. We are trained by what we hear."

She began her discussions of specific faults in the American voice with pitch. "Most voices are too high pitched," she explained. "Listen to yourself, try out your range, build a speech pattern and eliminate what you don't want. We hear what our own ears are attuned to. And we don't develop a sensitive ear by turning on the radio when we get up in the morning and letting it go until we are in bed at night." (When Mrs. von Hesse said "attuned" it was "attewned" —not "attooned.")

"We must sing when we talk. There are no lovely voices without this singing sound—this resonance," she said. The whole voice, she explained, is built around an adequate column of air, supplied from below. Harsh, high-pitched tones often are due to shallow breathing. She advocates what she calls "wide" rather than "deep" breathing. A speaker holds his audience by mere melody, she said—the range of tone in his voice—if he is making a long address.

Getting down to business in the matter of vocal exercises, Mrs. Von Hess said "Good morning, women of the press," and the club members, including Mrs. Roosevelt, echoed back, like kindergartners, "Good morning Mrs. Von Hesse," imitating as nearly as possible her inflection. "Good Afternoon' followed. Then, the repetition of Carl Sandburg's poem "Gone," phrase by phrase, including the deep-toned lines: "Were there five men or fifty hunting Chick?" In this, the effect was achieved by "packing your tones beneath your belt," using the diaphragm instead of the throat for impulse.

Mrs. McNutt Inquires About Broad 'A'

Mrs. Roosevelt did all the exercises and with the familiar air of one who has been put through the paces before. The hitherto untold story of how she happened to take speech lessons from Mrs. Von Hesse was told by Ruby Black, the club president, in her introduction. Mrs. Von Hesse wrote Mrs. Roosevelt, pointing out one or two things which were wrong with her radio voice—suggested she could help her and the First Lady gave her the opportunity to do so.

Questioned by one of the club members with a pretty Southern accept as to what about that, Mrs. Von Hesse replied it was "lovely to listen to but difficult to understand." In a recent letter from Helen Hayes, she said, the actress told her she found herself obliged to get rid of her Southern drawl entirely.

Mrs. Paul McNutt, wife of the Federal Security Administrator, who was a guest, inquired about the "beautiful broad A." It was ruled out completely by Mrs. von Hesse, who declared there was no place for it. She likewise asserted that the English women who criticize American speech so freely, have no round "O's" and "no straight 'A's', not tinged with Cockney," although they have beautiful voices.

She declined to criticize Washington speech, but said the Capital, like other cities, had a characteristic one. Pressed on the subject she observed it was "not too bad," but sounds "a little inhibited."

Guests of honor, in addition to Mrs. Roosevelt and the speaker, were Fru Betzy Kjelsberg, honorary president of the National Council of Norway and Honorary Vice President of the International Council of Women with Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, wife of the Minister of Norway. Also at the head table were Mrs. Eugene Vail, wife of the artist whose memorial exhibition is now at Corcoran Gallery, a guest of Miss Nina Allender; Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, and Mrs. Charles Stevenson.

Chevy Chase Pen Women Indorse Mrs. Gasch for National President

THE CHEVY CHASE BRANCH of the National League of American Pen Women yesterday afternoon voted to indorse Mrs. Edna Knight Gasch, of the Washington branch, for the office of national president. Mrs. Gasch has already received the indorsement of the local group. Mrs. Audrey Wurdemann Anslander, noted poet, now heads the league.

The Chevy Chase Pen Women also went on record in favor of the purchase of a new national clubhouse while real estate prices are low. The place originally bought for this purpose was sold some months ago, giving the league a substantial sum as a nucleus for whatever building plans it makes in the future.

The branch yesterday accepted with much regret the resignation of Mrs. Heber Votaw, of Takoma Park, as president. She was serving her second year in that office. Her unexpired term will be filled by Mrs. Hester Belle Provenson, first vice president.

A nominating committee was appointed to present a slate in March for the annual election. Members are Mrs. Emma W. P. Slack, chairman; Mrs. A. Pearl McPherson and Mrs. Viola Offutt.

The meeting was at the home of Mrs. McPherson.

More Fire Dept. Funds Favored

The board of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers yesterday indorsed the petition of the City Fire Fighters' Association to Congress to restore to the 1940 budget a provision for the salaries of the 15 firemen who have been dropped from the city force.

Mrs. Evelyn Bright Buckley pointed out that the least that could be done was to keep the fire-fighting force up to the minimum requirements set by the insurance underwriters, especially as some schools have been condemned by the fire marshal.

Mrs. C. D. Lowe, the president, appointed as members of the new policy committee Mrs. Charles Sinclair, Mrs. George Clark, Mrs. H. N. Stull and Mrs. Edward R. Seal.

Voters Told Latin Women Emphasize Social Conditions

Women of the United States should understand that each Latin-American country has its individual problems and its women their own ideas as to how to solve them, Miss Mary Winslow, of the Inter-American Commission of Women told the League of Women Voters yesterday.

Miss Winslow, who addressed a luncheon meeting of the league at the Y. W. C. A., was introduced by Mrs. Ruth Shipley, chief of the passports division of the State Department. She talked briefly of the work of the commission but said its program had not yet been announced as the chairman is in Argentina. She expressed hope it would be a co-operative one in which the needs of all American nations would be taken into consideration.

The philosophy of the women of the United States is not always that of those other countries, she said. In Latin America, women are more interested in improving social conditions, because of old traditions, than in suffrage and equal rights. In this country the women felt that suffrage was the first step and a necessary tool, but in some of the South American nations this is not the opinion, said Miss Winslow.

Emphasis there is on protective legislation, for women in industry, as indicated by the action of the Havana conference. This Miss Winslow attended as the only woman delegate.

She spoke of the movements in Cuba and Argentina to prevent discrimination against married women in business and the professions and digressed from her discussion of trends in Latin America long enough to urge organization in this country to combat similar discriminatory measures.

Miss Rose Bernardino, of the Dominican Republic, vice chairman of the Inter-American Commission, was a guest at the meeting. Mrs. Max O. Lorenz, league president, opened the program and Mrs. Pearl Klein, chairman of the Department of Government and the Economic Status of Women, presided.

Adas Israel Tableaux Show Jews' History

Donor Luncheon Is Presented for Fund For Education Here

Tableaux representing "Jewesses Throughout the Ages" were a feature yesterday of the fifth annual donor luncheon of the Adas Israel Sisterhood, given at the Mayflower Hotel. Nearly 300 guests attended the affair, which was for a fund to further Hebrew education in the city. Mrs. I. E. Levinson, the president, presided, and Mrs. Leon Tashof was chairman of the luncheon.

The tableaux were under the direction of Mrs. Morton Steinberg and Mrs. Irving Wilner. Mrs. Steinberg, representing an aged American woman, looking back on the history of Jewish women of the past, read as the tableaux were presented. As the first, "Old Judea," was shown she read: "In old Judea—There spoke the prophets and seers of Israel of human brotherhood and universal peace. Out of the old Judea went forth the law."

The figure in "Old Judea" was portrayed by Mrs. A. Harry Ostrow in Biblical costume, with a pitcher on her shoulder. Following this France was represented by Mrs. Sidney Atlas; Russia, Mrs. Alexander Rosenblum; the Hadassah, Mrs. Maurice Bisgyer; England, Mrs. Leo Schlosberg and Mrs. Harry Rosenthal; Germany, Mrs. Mary Narcissenfeld; America, Mrs. Morris Gerwirz with Mrs. I. A. Peake and Mrs. David Beax as youth pledging allegiance to Columbia.

For the final tableau, Mrs. Steinberg read: "The Jew and the Jewess of America have become the guardians of Israel, the world over."

LIKE AN OLD SOLDIER returning to the wars is the Firefighter, Washington's well-known old fireboat, now cruising the Potomac breaking ice. This is the first year there has been any ice for her to crack since the winter of 1934-1935.

The Firefighter joined the Washington Fire Department in 1905. Today her steel hull is still tough and stubborn but her boilers are considered too ancient to let them get up the full amount of steam for which they were designed.

Experts say that no more than 20 years' service should be expected of such boilers. These are nearly twice that age, which accounts for the order against letting them out. This restriction handicaps ice breaking, "but she can still cut a neat swath," say the men who operate her.

Capt. A. C. Kefauver, formerly chief of No. 1 Rescue Squad, is commander of the fireboat.

The craft is 101 feet long, with a 23-foot beam. she carries an eight-man crew. The Firefighter has a maximum speed of 12 miles an hour.

The Firefighter, whose boilers are the oldest on the Potomac, passes under the Lincoln Memorial Bridge, her steel hull plowing a channel through the ice

Holmes Asks Strict Ban on Ticket Fixing

Signal Lights Ordered Till 2 A. M.; Parking Forbidden On More Streets

By Howard F. Wentworth

An "absolute and inflexible" ban on fixing or adjusting traffic tickets will be part of Washington's 1940 war against highway lawlessness if recommendations of Inspector William E. Holmes, police traffic supervisor, are approved, it was learned last night.

Outlining plans for the year in a report to Maj. Ernest W. Brown, Holmes urged a rigid "hands off" policy in all matters involving cancellation or "adjustment" of traffic violation notices. Once tickets are issued, he said, police should do nothing about taking them back without collateral payment.

Holmes also suggested establishment of a new Police Department unit—a trained accident prevention and investigation squad to be headed by a qualified inspector or captain. The proposed bureau would be set up under a plan fostered by the Northwestern University Traffic Safety Institute, he added.

Lights to Stay Till 2 A. M.

To make 1940 one of the city's safest traffic years, Holmes said he planned a stringent, unrelenting enforcement drive. He said periodical meetings of commanding officers would be held in an effort to "keep alive necessary interest in making the District a safer place in which to live."

In another safety move yesterday, the Commissioners ordered all traffic lights to remain on until 2 a. m. Under the present system, green and red signals are turned off at midnight and at major intersections only a flashing amber light remains.

The action was taken after the Department of Vehicles and Traffic reported a "considerable accident problem" after midnight. The new order will become effective as soon as changes can be made by the Potomac Electric Power Co.

Inspector Holmes, in his report, recommended a permanent judge and prosecutor be assigned to Traffic Court.

Would Cut Cabs to 2,500

As a means of relieving downtown congestion, Holmes suggested that the number of taxicabs be reduced to a maximum of 2,500 and that their cruising habits be drastically curtailed.

Among other proposals in the report were:

Physical examination for all drivers.

Scientific tests for intoxication in drunk-driving cases.

Additional one-way streets throughout the city.

Elimination of "blind" corners by building and tree demolation.

Parking bans on all narrow streets where streetcar tracks run.

Expansion of pedestrian "walk" light system.

Parking Ban Extended

The Commissioners took away more parking space from motorists yesterday in an order affecting nine streets. Four other thoroughfares were designated for one-way traffic.

The new regulations become effective in ten days, unless official signs already have been posted, in which case they are effective immediately.

Parking also was prohibited within 5 feet of any automatic traffic recording device. It was explained that the photo-electric eyes now are being used for counting traffic throughout the city and that parking of cars in front of these eyes prevents operation of the machines.

Parking was banned on the following streets:

Northwest Section

Thirteenth street, no parking on the west side from Logan Circle to U street, at any time. From U street to Florida avenue, no parking, 7 to 9:30 a. m. and 4 to 6 p. m.

Columbia road, no parking at any time from a point opposite the south curb of Leroy place on east side of Connecticut avenue to the north driveway of 2022 Columbia road; and on west side from Connecticut avenue to Twentieth street. From Georgia avenue, east to the second alley on north side, no parking at any time.

Georgia avenue, from Concord avenue north to north building line of 5921 on east side; one-hour parking from 8 a. m. to 4 p. m. and no parking from 4 to 6 p. m.

New Hampshire avenue, from Park road to first alley north of Monroe street, no parking at any time.

Park road, from New Hampshire avenue to Sherman avenue, no parking on either side at any time.

Sherman avenue, from Florida avenue to Morton street, no parking on east side from 4 to 6 p. m. and on west side from 8 to 9:30 a. m.; from Morton street to New Hampshire avenue, no parking on either side at any time.

Northeast Section

First street, between H street and New York avenue, no parking on east side at any time, and on west side between H and Myrtle streets, no parking at any time. No parking from 4 to 6 p. m., including Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, on west side from Massachusetts avenue to H street.

Southeast Section

Nichols avenue, from Good Hope road to Talbert street, no parking on west side from 4 to 6 p. m., and on east side from 7 to 9:30 a. m.

Pennsylvania avenue, between B and Second streets, no parking on north side at any time.

One-Way Streets

First street northeast, northbound only from 4 to 6 p. m., including Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, from Massachusetts avenue to K street. Carrollsburg street southwest, from O to P streets, southbound at all times. New Hampshire avenue northwest, from Monroe street to Park road, southbound only. Park road northwest, from New Hampshire avenue to Sherman avenue, eastbound at all times.

Price Rise Seen In Fair Trade Bill

A renewed attack on the District fair trade practices bill was made yesterday by the consumers' interest committee of the District League of Women Voters.

The report predicted that enactment of the legislation, now before the Senate District Committee, would increase retail prices and "protect the inefficient distributor against competition from more efficient" dealers. Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, plans to call up the bill at the first Senate District Committee meeting.

Carmody Tells Engineers the Test of Today Is Creation of Work Opportunities for All

LORD LOTHIAN, British Ambassador — COL. D. H. SAWYER, President ASCE — JOHN CARMODY, Head of FWA

British Ambassador Lord Lothian last night presented Col. Sawyer a reproduction of the Myddleton Cup as "a token of friendship and esteem" from British Civil Engineers before 300 members and guests of the District branch of the American Society of Civil Engineers

Federal Works Administrator John Carmody last night challenged the Nation to adapt the technological achievements of engineering to "the needs and uses of the plain people of our time."

For America the great test of the day is "whether we can help create work opportunities for all those who want and need work—and that means nearly everyone," he said.

Carmody spoke before 300 members and guests of the District branch of the American Society of Civil Engineers at a banquet in the Washington Hotel.

As "a token of friendship and esteem" from British civil engineers the national society was presented with a reproduction of the Myddleton Cup by Lord Lothian, British Ambassador.

The cup, modeled after one presented Sir Hugh Myddleton in 1613 by the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths of London was to have been given the American society at the international conference of civil engineers in New York City last September. Outbreak of war prevented attendance of the British delegates.

Lord Lothian, speaking in behalf of the British society, said the "adventurous spirit and inquiring mind" of Sir Hugh were typical of the Elizabethan Age, of the men who colonized America, and of the present-day engineering profession. Sir Hugh was honored by the Goldsmiths for bringing to London its first regular supply of "reasonably pure water," the Ambassador recalled.

Col. Donald H. Sawyer, president of the American Society of Civil Engineers, expressed hope in accepting the cup that English engineers soon will be free to devote their talents to peaceful pursuits.

Junior Group Asks Shorter Bar Exams

Shortening of the bar examination and broadening of its scope were recommended last night by the legal education committee of the Junior Bar Association.

The report said that the examination here deals largely with private law although "public jurisprudence has greatly expanded."

The group also pointed out there are 5,000 law students in the District, or 13 per cent of those in the country. Two-thirds of the students here are attending unapproved schools, they added.

The report, read by John L. Pratt and recommending that efforts be made to insure better drafting of the examination, was approved by the association.

Elected to office were: John K. Cunningham, chairman, who succeeded Al Philip Kane; Philip Goldstein, vice-chairman; John R. Reed, secretary and treasurer; George A. Cassidy, jr., Richard W. Galiher, and O. R. McGuire, jr., executive council; John K. Cunningham, Harryman Dorsey, Justin L. Edgerton and Al Philip Kane, delegates to the Junior Bar conference, and James O'D. Moran, director of the District Bar Association.

Officers elected by the Junior Women's Bar Association were: Marion E. Poole, chairman, succeeding Helen Goodner; Elizabeth Benson, vice-chairman; Marion Toomey, secretary-treasurer, and Helen Prentice Culhane and Helen Goodner, members of the executive council.

29 Medical Students Win Honor at G. W.

Twenty-nine George Washington University Medical School students were inducted into the Smith-Russell-Reed Society, honorary medical group, last night as four District medical authorities were made honorary members.

New honorary members are Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital; Dr. Thomas Martin Peery, assistant professor of pathology at George Washington Medical School; Admiral Edward Rhodes Stitt, U. S. N., retired, former surgeon general, and Admiral Harold W. Smith, commandant of the Naval Medical Center.

Dr. Francis R. Hagner, professor emeritus of urology in the medical school, discussed the part played by medicine in the identification of John Wilkes Booth, assassin of Lincoln. Dr. John Frederick May, son of the founder of the District Medical Society, was able to make identification from a scar on Booth's leg the result of an operation.

Students made active members of the honor society were:

Charles Bernstein, Lester Blumenthal, Jerome Brawer, Irving B. Brick, Phillip A. Cox, Abraham W. Danish, Herman O. Dreskin, Leila L. Hulbert, Julius Kauffman, Norman B. Kanof, Isidore Lavine, Mark H. Lepper, Frederick S. Lorenz, Virgil A. LoRusso, John S. Moore, David Mountain, Perry J. Nolt, Austin B. Rohrbaugh, Morris H. Rosenberg, Catherine R. Smith, George Speck, Bernard D. Svedlow. Seniors: Joseph V. Casella, Sam Putrovsky, Genevieve A. McLaughlin, George T. Mitchell, Vernon A. Stehman, Thomas H. Weaver and Saul Zuckerman.

City's Oldest Reserve Marine, Sergt. Playfair, Retires at 60

Great buddies are Sergt. George Playfair and James Playfair, his 4-year-old grandson. Young Playfair could not understand why tears came to the eyes of the older Playfair last night as he stood at attention to get his discharge papers after 35 years of service to his country

There was a lump in the sergeant's throat last night—and a cold wind whipping down E street across a parking lot didn't account for the tears in his eyes.

The District's oldest Marine Corps reservist, Sergt. George Playfair, 60, stood at attention while he received an honorable discharge after 35 years of service. Then the Fifth Battalion, Marine Corps Reserve, passed in review before him.

Sergt. Playfair couldn't forget the days of 1906 when he served with the leathernecks in the Cuban pacification. He couldn't forget the days on duty in Southern waters aboard the old fighting ships Virginia, Prairie and Newark. And behind those experiences were days spent laboring on the Panama Canal.

Now the sergeant is a sail maker at the Navy Yard, with only a year and nine months to go before his retirement. He couldn't be both a civilian employe of the Navy Yard and a Marine reservist, the officials said. A man has to earn a living, so he had to resign from the Corps—even though his heart is still there with the leathernecks.

The colonel knew how it was. Lieut. Col. Harvey L. Miller gave him the honorable discharge and a strong pressure of his hand and they walked back to the armory side by side as buddies and not as commander and non-com. In 1906 in Cuba Lieut. Col. Miller was an enlisted man, although the two didn't know each other then.

Playfair's grandson, James, 4, was there, very proud of his grandfather.

"You'll see a lot of me at the Armory," said the sergeant to the colonel. "I'm going to keep coming around."

Alexandrians Peek At Torpedo Plant; Edison Asks Ban

The Alexandria City Council last night considered a request from Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison that townsmen stay away from the Navy's torpedo plant on the Alexandria water front.

Ever since the torpedo building was erected in World War days, a wooden loading platform has extended over the public right of way on the street side of the building. For many years passersby have used the platform as a sidewalk.

Now that the torpedo plant is active again the passersby get in the way of workmen, Secretary Edison wrote the council.

Engine Failure Blamed In Crash Fatal to 14

Crash of a Pan American Airways twin-engined flying boat at Rio de Janeiro, August 13, 1939, with fatal injuries to all but 2 of 16 persons aboard was attributed by the Air Safety Board yesterday to "loss of power from the left engine during the landing approach necessitating an attempted landing under extremely hazardous conditions."

Funds Urged For 15 More D. C. Firemen

Logan-Thomas Circle Citizens Association Favors Proposed Home for Inebriates

Restoration in the District budget of appropriations for 15 additional firemen was urged last night by the Logan-Thomas Circle Citizens Association.

Members also voted approval of the proposal of Commissioner Hazen for a municipal home for inebriates.

Conn. Ave. Businessmen

More active participation in efforts to "pull business to Connecticut avenue" was urged last night by Lawrence Rubel at the meeting of the Connecticut Avenue Citizens Association.

L. R. Coburn asserted "we all are interested in getting customers under our roofs or in a mood where we can sell them something." He said the attendance at the meeting was encouraging and urged expansion of membership.

A nominating committee was appointed composed of Rubel, chairman; Ethyl Fistere and Arthur Kelly.

Members voted support for the President's Birthday Ball and decided to present a silver cup each month to the shop having the best window display.

7th St. Businessmen

Gilbert R. Leake last night was unanimously elected president of the North Seventh Street Business Men's Association.

Other officers named were: Charles Gardell, first vice president; Percy Solomon, second vice president; John De Marco, secretary; Philip T. Harpine, treasurer; Sam Gritz, sergeat-at-arms; Raymond Gittleman, general counsel. Elected to the executive committee were David Wise, chairman; Louis Colman, Mrs. Bessie Gittleman, Theodore Phillips and Jacob Salus.

Sigmund Ades was named chairman of the committee in charge of installation of new officers at the next meeting.

Kingman Park Civic Ass'n.

Licensing of the area at Twenty-first and C streets northeast as a circus grounds is "a public nuisance," the Kingman Park Civic Association asserted in a resolution adopted last night.

The association invited all northeast civic groups to join it in a concerted protest against return of the circus to the neighborhood this year.

Capital News in Brief

Thief's Victim Elusive

Police early yesterday caught a thief with comparatice ease, then spent a difficult hour trying to find the robbery victim.

Responding to a radio call of a purse-snatching at Adams Hill and Ontario roads northwest, Tenth Precinct Privates E. E. Hall and J. R. Hale found a colored youth lurking in a nearby apartment house.

A search of the neighborhood failed to locate Florence Wallingford, of 1920 Clydesdale place, who had been robbed. She was finally discovered at an address several blocks away, where she had gone to telephone and await police.

Chow Pup Tries to Take Place Of Invalid's 2 Poisoned Pets

Mrs. Ida Lee with Frisky. She wants a poodle to take the place of one that died last week at the hands of a poisoner. Another was poisoned two months ago

Mrs. Ida Lee Appeals for Poodle To Help Fill Void Created in Her Heart by Deaths of Her Dogs

A little brown chow pup that looks like a bear cub is trying to take the place of two poodles in the heart of Mrs. Ida Lee, of 904 Thirteenth street northeast, an invalid for the last eight years.

But the chow, named Frisky, is not succeeding very well, despite the good spirits that make her roll all over the floor.

"It's hard to pretend a little bear looks like a couple of lambs," Mrs. Lee said.

One of Mrs. Lee's pet poodles, 12-year-old Monkey, died last week at the hands of an unknown poisoner. Two months ago 4-year-old Barker died in agony soon after recovering from one poison attempt under Mrs. Lee's careful treatment.

For five years after she was seriously injured in an accident in 1931, Monkey was Mrs. Lee's greatest solace. Three years ago, when taking the poodle for a walk, she met Policeman John White, of Second Precinct, who was airing his dog. On Christmas Day, 1936, her birthday, the White family made her a present of Barker.

Now both are gone. A friend at the Central Union Mission, Mrs. John Bennett, tried to fill the emptiness in Mrs. Lee's home by making a plea for another pet Saturday over Station WOL. Before the program was off the air, a listener had offered the Chow.

But Mrs. Lee, though thankful for the frisky pup with a heart-shaped patch on its head, would like a poodle, too, to make her forget her two "little lambs." And she asked The Post yesterday to publish a story offering a good home for a poodle to keep her company.

"Monkey had been with me so long," she said, "I couldn't believe she was taken from me. She was getting old, but you wouldn't think she'd passed her first birthday. She was that lively. She was smart, too. I'd put her food in a dish on the table and she would get it herself without upsetting a thing.

"Saturday, I mopped her throat when she was bleeding terribly, and my hands came out covered with glass.

"I couldn't believe she was dead. I combed her hair and prettied her up and it seemed to me her pulse was still beating. Then they took her away."

Dr. Ballou Gives Plans For Cripples

Allison School Remodeling Data Will Be Ready Soon, He Asserts

Estimates for remodeling the Allison School, to be converted to the uses of crippled children, soon will be ready, Dr. F. W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, said yesterday.

Target of agitated protests transformation of the building from a school for tuberculous children to one for the physically handicapped is being delayed, Dr. Ballou said the project is going forward with all speed.

The Allison grounds and building, at Thirteenth and Allison streets northwest, have been thoroughly surveyed and estimates are being prepared by the D. C. Repair Shop on the cost of building a driveway, improving the plumbing, making the floors safe for crutch users and other necessary changes, Dr. Ballou declared.

Hopes Fund Will Suffice

He expressed the hope the closing of Allison health school, whose pupils will be transferred to regular schools at the beginning of the next term, will leave a large enough balance in the transportation fund to pay for the remodeling job.

At present Washington's crippled children—but able to attend daily classes—are receiving instruction at Langdon School. The Washington Kiwanis Club is the chief sponsor of the plan to give up Langdon and transfer activities to Allison. A special committee, headed by Bynum E. Hinton, feared the transfer would not be made until Dr. Ballou yesterday gave assurance the plan is being carried forward.

Addressing the Kiwanis Club last week, Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, commended that organization for its activities in behalf of handicapped children. He praised efforts to have a separate school building provided.

Congress Must Act, Too

Langdon School, Twentieth and Evarts streets northeast, was built as an elementary school. One section was set aside for crippled children's classes in 1937 when the Weightman School, which had been used, was branded a firetrap.

Even if the unused portion of the transportation fund is great enough to pay for the Allison building remodeling, it will be necessary for Congress to grant a reappropriation, Dr. Ballou said.

It is planned to allow the children attending Allison Health School to finish the present term, which means the building can hardly be turned over to crippled children before spring.

Maryland Beats Duke, 32-30; Catholic U. Bows

DeWitt Sinks Winning Goal For Terrapins

Registers 16 Points To Pace Victors in Swift Battle; Terp Defense Clicks Well

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Maryland University's courtmen scored the first two baskets against Duke last night at College Park and to the delight of some 2,500 rooters also scored the last that gave them a 32-30 victory over their Southern Conference rivals.

In the 38 minutes between the opening and closing scores, Duke was either ahead of the Terps with a lead that was as high as 17-10, or the game was tied up, and the score rested on deadlocked figures no less than six times.

For a game that reached the dull point for the first 25 minutes of play, it suddenly came to life midway in the final period and for the closing minutes the fans were on their feet as first Duke would get a two-point margin and then the Terps would tie it up.

DeWitt Wins Game

A slender former All-High star with Western, lanky George DeWitt, was the difference between victory and defeat for the College Park team. After scoring two baskets in the first half, DeWitt arched five in a row that never touched the rim and with 90 seconds to play scored on a snowbird that proved to be the winning basket. He scored 16 points in all.

DeWitt's second-half performance shaded the first half scoring spree of Glenn Price, Blue Devil forward, who accounted for the first nine points of the ball game for the visitors and scored 13 of their 19 points at half time that found them leading 19 to 14.

But in the second half Price met with a combination of more guarding by the Terp defense and also lost his hot hand and he made but one basket for a 15-point total for the night, one short of the Maryland ace. But for 9 minutes of the first half, Price was the man of the hour.

Duke Pulls Away

The Terps' scoring ace of previous games, Charley Weidinger, opened the scoring and DeWitt followed to give the hosts a 4-0 lead. But Price took matters in hand at this point and aided by 6-foot-3 Chuck Holley and Capt. Bill Parsons, they boosted the score to 13-8, Duke. They alternated points until the half.

The same combination that opened the first half scoring repeated for the Terps in the second half and brought the score to 19-18. DeWitt, who made eight field goals in 16 attempts, tied it at 20-all, with Holley's foul shot the twentieth point for Duke. Holley batted in two snowbirds for a 24-20 lead, but Duvall and DeWitt tied it up at 24-all.

Valasek for Duke and DeWitt for Maryland tied it at 26-all, with nine minutes to play. Then Price connected for his lone second-half score and Parsons boosted the Duke lead to 30-26 but that ended Duke's scoring for the night. DeWitt made it 28 and Duvall knotted the count at 30-all.

The Winning Shot

With four minutes to play, Cy Valesek missed a foul for Duke and Clyde Allen dribbled the length of the floor but missed a snowbird. Then in a scramble around the Terp basket, DeWitt grabbed the ball and flipped it in for the winning points.

It was the second Conference triumph in two starts for Maryland, and the first defeat in two tries for Duke. For the season, it left Coach Shipley's boys with five victories and two defeats, with Duke winning four against three setbacks, Maryland, Baltimore and Oklahoma A. and M.

Jack Dempsey Gets in the Swim—The Hard Way

Rickard Pool Dedicated by Jack Dempsey

Former Champion Honors Memory of Promoter at Miami

By the United Press

Miami Beach, Fla., Jan. 9.—Jack Dempsey today dedicated a memorial to Tex Rickard—the greatest sports protomer who ever handed out an "Annie Oakley."

A gaudy crowd jammed around the beetle-browed man who held the heavyweight title back in the golden decade of sports as he tossed a wreath onto the blue waters of a new swimming pool at his hotel here.

For the audience it was a gala event—a carnival with the usual bathing beauties for props. But there was a serious look on Jack's face as he said:

"I dedicate this memorial to the greatest sportsman who ever lived—Tex Rickard."

Probably only half a dozen persons in the crowd had ever seen old Tex and not many more knew who he was, but for Dempsey this was an important moment.

Remembers 1927

Dempsey's thoughts were back in the past—on the night of September 22, 1927, when, before a record crowd that paid $2,658,668, Jack failed to regain the heavyweight title from Gene Tnney. That was the last Dempsey fight Rickard ever promoted and Jack said today that he was glad he lost.

"Looking back at it now," Jack said, "I'm thankful I didn't win back the title. I was defeated by a gentleman and a great fighter. Sure, I came close to winning, but I'm glad I didn't. Those few seconds changed my entire life.

"I guess I was through as a fighter then and had I won I might have gone the way of so many other leather tossers who didn't know when to quit. And I owe it all to Tex. He picked me up, made me a fighter and then died at the height of our partnership."

Eagles Down Orioles, 4-1; Kuntz Is Injured

Capital Star Breaks Wrist as Rivals Stage Rough Battle; Locals Gain Lead in Second Period; 1,500 Watch

By Jack Munhall.

Driving hard to overtake the pace-setting New York Rovers, the Washington Eagles strengthened their hold on second place in the Eastern Amateur League last night at Riverside Stadium by defeating the third-place Baltimore Orioles, 4-1, in a furious encounter before 1,500 fans.

The full cost of Washington's victory, which brings them to within 4 points of the Rovers, has not yet been calculated, however, for Alan Kuntz sustained a broken left wrist in the second period.

The star Eagles' wing, who was tied for third place in the league scoring race, according to the latest official figures, collided with Guy Roach and apparently fell on his arm. He lay on the ice for a few moments before there was a lull in play, his body doubled in pain and his face buried in his arms. He was removed from the ice to the dressing room and later to Emergency Hospital.

Washington Coach Redver Mackenzie said he believed Kuntz would be lost for seven or eight weeks, which, if true, means he'll be out for practically the rest of the season

Slash With Sticks

The injury to Kuntz was the first serious one to occur here this year, but it's a wonder they didn't cart them off in droves last night the way both teams were promiscuously slashing with sticks. It was perhaps the roughest match yet seen at Riverside, and local fans rose to boo a new villain in the big, unnecessarily belligerent Roach.

Roach drew two penalties and as he left the ice to serve the second of them he was hastened along by the lustiest Bronx cheer accorded any visiting hockey player to date.

The Orioles were never in the running as they dropped their fifth match in six meetings with the Eagles. The teams meet again in Baltimore Sunday night and another red-hot battle is anticipated.

Courteau in Box

The hot intercity rivals fought hard through a scoreless first period, and fought is used literally. Paul Courteau, Eagles' wing, spent 8 of the 20 minutes in the penalty box.

Courteau, former Canadian welterweight boxer, mixed it up with three different Orioles. First he and Guy

Finnish Relief Fund Hockey Benefits Set

The first of a series of athletic events to donate a percentage of their receipts to the Finnish Relief Fund will be sponsored at Riverside Stadium Friday night when Redvers Mackenzie's Washington Eagles entertain the McIntyre Hockey Club, of Timmins, Ontario, at 8:30 o'clock.

On the following Friday night, January 19, the Eagles will play host to the Jersey Skeeters, of River Vale, N. J., in another match that donates 10 per cent of its gross receipts to the cause.

S. G. Leoffler, owner of Riverside Stadium and of the Washington Eagles' franchise, yesterday had completed final details for the presentation of these matches under the auspices of the Finnish Relief Fund.

"I sincerely believe this is a great cause and believe Washingtonians will support it," Leoffler declared yesterday. "We are offering two fine attractions in an effort to do our bit.

The Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., of Georgetown University, chairman of the Finnish Relief Fund locally, readily accepted the proposition submitted by Leoffler.

"We have had many fine offers from worthy organizations to help this good cause along," he disclosed, "and we are counting on sports to do their part. We are glad to include ice hockey among our activities and feel certain the response will be gratifying."

Fred Apostoli, Bettina Sign For Rematch

Lightheavies to Meet In Garden Feb. 2; Winner to Get Conn

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 9.—Fred Apostoli, the San Francisco bellhop, and Mello Bettina will meet in a 15-round rematch on February 2 in Madison Square Garden, Promoter Mike Jacobs announced today.

Apostoli, former world's middleweight champion, made his debut last Friday in the Garden as a light-heavyweight by winning a close 12-round decision from Bettina.

Sammy Angott, of Louisville and Pittsburgh, rated as the No. 1 lightweight contender, will meet Pete Lello, of Chicago, in a ten-round bout, and another ten-rounder will pit Billy Marquardt, Canadian lightweight, against either Tony Marteliano or Primo Flores, both New Yorkers.

The Apostoli-Bettina fight last week resulted in a split decision as the former middleweight king and Bettina, who held the light-heavyweight championship until Billy Conn took it away from him, engaged in numerous clinches, especially in the last four rounds.

The fight drew 7,707 fans, who paid $19,062.

Jacobs said the winner of the rematch would get a shot at Billy Conn, although no date for that fight was set.

The promoter also announced he would appear at the State Athletic Commission offices tomorrow to seek sanction of the proposed Maxie Baer-Tony Galento fight in March for the Finnish relief fund.

Loyola Five, Of Baltimore, Wins, 46-36

Thobe, Scoring 15 Points, Leads Team To Victory Over Cards in Opener

By Al Hailey

Catholic University launched its 1940 basketball campaign in Brookland Gymnasium last night, but it was nothing to write home about—the Sun Bowl boys saw a half-time lead fate and lost, 46-26, to Loyola of Baltimore.

The Cardinals lost the services of their captain and center, Carmen Pirro, on fouls late in the final period and could never overcome a 5-point lead the Greyhounds from Baltimore.

Loss of Pirro, whose passing and defensive work kept the Cardinals in the game, saw their attack fall apart as they missed try after try from the floor and even went astray on their free throws—which were plentiful.

Still Football Minded

Coach Fod Cotten's lads plainly showed they had had too little time to recover from the New Year's Day football date with Tempe Teachers of Arizona in El Paso's Sun Bowl, but at the same time they showed a spark that may see them better their 1939 record when they won but four games in 18 starts.

It was a neck-and-neck battle from the start, with Loyola holding a scant lead through the early period right up until half-time when Pirro, on a free toss, tied up the score at 14-14.

Carrig sank a perfect shot from the middle of the floor, and Vic Miller, substitute end on the football team, took a pass the length of the court from Pirro to make it 18-14. As the whistle sounded, Ed McDonough's shot was hitting the basket for Loyola to make it 18-16.

Loyola came back in the second half to make it another seesaw affair, with Catholic U. holding the upper hand until midway of the period. Carrig led the way for Catholic University's football-minded cagers with 13 points, while Bernard Thobe, sophomore forward, took high scoring honors for the night with 15 points.

The Cards kept Loyola's Ed Barczak, twice all-Maryland guard, bottled up all night, but he was a continuous thorn in their side on defense. Carrig, Sachon, Pirro and White, who started for C. U., are all members of the varsity football team. Daly was the only nonfootball man in the starting line-up.

Turner Lists Extra Bout on Thursday's Card

Six matches instead of the customary five will be offered by Promoter Joe Turner for his weekly wrestling show tomorrow night in the Fourteenth and W street arena.

All the old familiar groan artists will be back with new routines, and to supplement his regular crowd Turner is presenting two women wrestlers—Mildred Burke, claimant of the feminine lightweight championship of the world, and Vilma Dean, niece of the illustrious Man Mountain Dean.

Joe Cox and Alan Eustace, who should know every loose plank in the local emporium's ring by now, will battle in the 90-minute feature.

Supporting acts bring out Buddy Pappas, 21-year-old local boy, against Angelo Leone, Gino Garibaldi against Frank Brunowicz, Tarzan White against Rudy Dusek, and Lew Plummer against Tommy Rae.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

"Bygones is bygones," said Goldie Ahearn coining a phrase. "What is already water under the bridge is floating down the river, you know what I mean. What I like, please, is some writeups, you know, big ones, for my next show. It is a sweethot, a netural. You know who?"

No, who?

"I'm telling you. Phil Furr voisus Milo Theodorescu. If you spell it that way, I don't know, but that is the general idea. Anyway, who cares how he spells it. A real honest-to-God Roomanian that's what he is. From the nobility, too. A nephew to the prime minister of Roomania."

A nephew to the prime minister?

"Sure, a nephew, a cousin, a in-law, or some kind from a relation, you know what I mean. He's something anyway to the prime minister before they shot the prime minister. You know how they get mixed up in politics in them overnight countries. Prime minister today and fish peddler tomorrow. Such an existence. You think I have worries. You should be a Roomanian."

POVICH

Can this Roumanian fight a little bit?

'He's No Green Pea,' Says Goldie, Happily

"Fight? I'm telling you, ain't I? Soch a fighter. Welterweight champion of Europe. You know, mit belts and titles like they giff them in Europe. Funny thing in Europe, first thing right away they want to giff the champion a belt. He's no green pea, mind you. From Georges Carpentier he learned how to fight.

From Carpentier, honest?

"Sure from Carpentier. I am telling you no stuff now. You know me, sometimes I must tell the truth. Carpentier liked the kid. He got him in the gymnasium and he showed him a right hand. I mean it, a right hand that lands hard, like this . . . woomph."

Hey, that hurt.

"Oy, am I a dumbbell. You are my friend and I bump you like that. My head examined is what I should have. Here, I'm sticking my chin out like this. Go ahead. Bop me one hard. I don't care. Even if it kills me I don't care."

Okay, skip it.

"Well, like I say, this Roomanian is doing me a favor to come down to my little arena. The Garden wants him, Chicago wants him. But he is doing me a pussonal favor. I should live so long as to pay him back. In this country he has been fighting the best . . . Milt Aron, Fritzie Zivic, Tony Martin . . .

The Fans Like His "Antiques" in the Ring

Who are they?

"Who are they? For $5,000 you can't get Milt Aron into a ring and Zivic will laugh at that money. But my Roomanian beat 'em."

He did?

"Oh well, maybe it was a draw. Maybe he lost a close decision, so what? Anyway he is no bum or he wouldn't be in there with those kind. A colorful fighter that's what he is. Has got all kinds of tricks in the ring. The fans go big for him."

They like his antics, huh?

"That's it. That's what they like . . . his antiques. Soch antiques by a prize fighter you should live so long to see. Before the fight, after the fight, this Roomanian kisses his opponent, he kisses his manager, he kisses the referee. He kisses everybody like you know them Frenchmen do. On the cheek he gives them a big smack, a loud one like this . . .

Never mind.

"All right then, but I'm telling you, he's a knock-out. For peanuts he's fighting for me, but the money is no consideration. He is you know what I mean a goodwill ambassador from Roomania. You know all them countries are always sending goodwill ambassadors some place to stir up a little goodwill and then maybe borrow some dough from Uncle Sam. Well, he's that. Money don't count. He wants a fight with Armstrong to take that title back to Roomania to show his uncle or whoever the prime minister is this time."

The Epple of His Eye Is Going Places

And as for Furr?

"Now, you got something. Like I always said you are smart when you start talking sense. Soch an improved fighter I never saw. Furr is you know what I mean the epple of my eye. He's going places. Way up I mean. He is serious now, you know. He used to like to play around a little bit, do this a little bit and that a little bit, but that's all over. He's in shape."

Uh, huh.

"So you don't believe me. You should live so long as to hear me tell a lie. Phil Furr I tell you has got his confidence back. I have brought him back for five fights and every man he has put on the floor. He used to worry about his right hand. He broke it when he hit Ceferina Garcia on top of the head in a fight in Salt Lake City. That's in California. Now it's all healed up. You know what I think?

No.

"He'll knock that Roomanian out."

Zeke, 'Cinderella For a Night,' Balks At Giants' Offer

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Jan. 9.—The boys in the bleachers will love this—slam-bang, happy old Zeke Bonura being described on the society pages as dressed in a "mantle of American beauty velvet and royal blue, embroidered with rhinestones."

That's a fact. Rollicking, 210-pound Zeke was king for a night and wowed his subjects in a "Roman wreath of rhinestones and carried a sceptre topped by a small wreath of rhinestones," to quote the rhinestone-conscious society writer.

Zeke himself, with unaccustomed humility, didn't want to talk much about it today, but let out a familiar roar when he heard the New York Giants wanted him to take a pay-cut for 1940 first-basing chores.

"I won't take no cut," he asserted bluntly while opening his morning mail after his Cinderella adventure last night, in which he not only was a king but Ben Hur as well, and had four white horses to drive.

"I led the team in hitting and driving in runs," he continued as he checked off foodstuffs in his father's produce warehouse. "What do they want me to do? Stand on my head?

Early, Haynes Sign for 1940 With Nats

The makings of a rookie battery was assured the Nats for 1940 yesterday when the signed contracts of Catcher Jake Early and Pitcher Joe Haynes were received by Clark Griffith.

They are the fourth and fifth Washington players to sign for next season.

Griffith declined to divulge salary terms, but announced that both players were given wage increases. He had praise for both.

"Haynes showed us enough last season to lead us to believe that he will be a great help," said the Nats' owner. "Some of the games he pitched were worthy of the finest pitchers in the league. With his added experience he could be the biggest winner on our staff.

"I think Early will be our regular catcher," said Griffith, who with that statement didn't hurt his position in discussing terms with the yet-unsigned Rick Ferrell.

DeSautels, Lefebvre Signed by Red Sox

Boston, Jan. 9 (AP).—Receipt of the signed contracts of Catcher Gene DeSautels and Southpaw Pitcher Wilfred Lefebvre, the two Holy Cross products on the Boston Red Sox roster, was announced today by General Manager Eddie Collins.

DeSautels has been the Sockers' first string catcher. Lefebvre, who was shipped to the Louisville farm early last season, was recalled and appeared in several late September games.

Penn State Host Tonight To G. U. Five

Three sophomores will be in the revised line-up Georgetown will use against Penn State at State College, Pa., tonight in its first start since Saturday's defeat by George Washington.

With George Pajak, junior forward, lost temporarily by illness, Coach Elmer Ripley will bring two first-year varsity men off the bench and shift a third. Al Lujack will be moved from center to forward and Buddy O'Grady and Jimmy Geibel will be promoted to the regular team. Geibel will replace Lujack at center and O'Grady will take Pajak's place at forward.

Capt. Johnny Schmitt and Irving Rizzi, senior and junior guards, respectively, retain their places in the line-up.

The Hoyas invade Scranton University Friday night and if tonight's line-up clicks, it probably will be started intact against the strong Pennsylvania five.

Manassas F. D. Wins

The Manassas Firemen five defeated Vienna A. C., 31-21, Tuesday night in the Manassas High School gym. Herb Saunders led the winners with 11 points and Thompson was high for the losers with 9.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 9.—Quick Jeeves, the mail:

"Dear sir: (writes William Mills, of New York) I note with considerable interest, and a kind of alarm, the enthusiastic manner in which you and other sportswriters indorsed former President Hoover's Help Finland campaign. Finland is a great, industrious and lovable country. But is it any better than Poland or the U. S. A.?

CONSIDINE

"As a matter of fact, the Poles were pretty good to us when we were having our Revolution. But I didn't see any of our politicians or our sportswriters weeping over their plight when Hitler mowed them down.

"Each year here in the United States an extensive drive is made by the Red Cross, and most of that money, I think, is spent in foreign lands. Each year, too, the country celebrates the birthday of our present President, donating sums to infantile paralysis work by means of sports events, collections and balls. Isn't this a more worthy charity than any foreign contribution? It must be, for it gives medical care to a lot of American kids who are in terrible need, and face a lifetime of twisted arms and legs.

Good Time for Tennessee to Remember

"There is plenty of room to give, here in America. Wouldn't you get a bigger thrill if you knew that a part of the dollar you were laying on the line for a prize fight, basketball game or track meet was going to the crippled kid down the block, or the old gent who tilts the lids of garbage cans in search of food? This is not a crank writer, but one who loves this country and wants to help its needy ahead of all others. If I remember rightly, last year Mr. Madison Square Garden refused the paralysis committee use of his vast hall for an American charity cause, but today, 365 days later, he is in full accord with Mr. Hoover's Help-the-Finns drive. I think you and the others wrote your rave notices of Mr. Hoover's fine-enough charity in too much of a hurry. You'll be bigger men in the eyes of your readers if you take your pieces apart and make a sterner plea for that kid with the crutch who is waiting for you to help him to walk."

"Sir," says C. W. Hutchinson, of Cincinnati. "I see by the papers where the University of Tennessee, which wouldn't take its band nor all of its football squad to the Rose Bowl, received a check for $132,000 as its share of the booty.

"I was thinking that this might be a good time for the school to turn over some of that money to the parents of Herb Tade, the boy who was badly hurt in the Tennessee-Kentucky game at Lexington several years ago.

"I understand that Tade has been confined to his bed since that game, in which he suffered a fractured skull. There was talk several years ago that the Tennessee Legislature was going to raise a fund for the Tades, but nothing seems to have come of it. Wouldn't this be a good time for the school to take the lead in taking care of amateurs who are badly hurt while playing in a so-called amateur organization's professionalized sports?"

Plenty of Knocks on Way Up

"You wrote an article on the tightfistedness of ballplayers in general," Douglas Miller, of Dallas, gets around to saying. "You harped on Ken Keltner in particular, and if you are fair you will admit that there are two sides to any argument.

"I am a Class D ballplayer, but I think I can understand what prompted Keltner, a big leaguer, to try to get that $15 a week unemployment insurance. He hasn't been a big leaguer very long. He must remember the struggles that make up the ride to the top, for the average ballplayer. Do you realize that most of them begin playing at 10 years of age, and that they usually are so crazy about the game that they neglect their schooling and eventually find themselves useless for any kind of work in their post-baseball days? Most kids start in pro ball at salaries ranging from $60 to $80 a month, lasting only four months of the year. They ride 200 and 300 miles in a day, and play that night and maybe a double-header the next day. And they ride on springless busses, mind you. You don't get out of the bus leagues until you reach A-1 ball.

"Do you know that many players deny themselves the privilege of marriage because of the uncertainties of their jobs, and the lack of assurance of a winter income? Keltner probably lived on $15 a week not too long ago. It still represents important money to him, especially when he remembers the past and sees big leaguers being shunted back to that sort of thing all the time. I don't blame him for trying to get it, for, after all, the $15 a week came out of his own Indian paychecks.

"I hope you see fit to print this, because I think it shows the real side of Ken Keltner and ballplayers in general."

Delighted to print it, Mr. M., and thank you, one and all, for getting us over a snowy, newsless day.

Eastern High Wins; Roosevelt Defeats Central

Defending Champions Stage Belated Rally to Take Opener of 1940 Series; Roosevelt Five Unimpressive in It's First Victory

The 1940 race for public high school basketball honors got off to a flying start yesterday as Eastern, defending champion, put on a belated drive to edge out Anacostia, 36-31, and Roosevelt slipped and fumbled its way to a 38-29 triumph over Central's representatives.

Almost 3,000 of the most partisan fans in the District packed Anacostia and Roosevelt gyms for the games. The 1939 champs played to over 500 in Anacostia's small quarters, and upward of 2,200 saw the Riders take their initial outing on their home floor.

Roosevelt Winner

Frequent fouls and general sluggishness on the part of both teams marked the Roosevelt-Central scrap. On the basis of this performance, Roosevelt's championship aspirations, thought to be very sound, seems a bit premature. Its passing, especially in the first half, left considerable to be desired.

Central offered surprising resistance in the early stages of the game, holding the Rough Riders to a 10-to-8 margin at the end of the first quarter. Neither team displayed a great deal of unity and the points as a whole were spawned from individual efforts.

In the second quarter Roosevelt began to assert its superiority with a few well-timed field goals and gradually assmued a lead never to be relinquished.

Perlo Leads Riders

Hymie Perlo, Roosevelt's scoring ace in past engagements, led the Riders' play in the second quarter, but during the course of the entire game he was somewhat shackled, being held to 9 points. The Riders led, 20-13, at halftime.

Play during the second half was pretty even, with Roosevelt scoring 18 points while Central compiled 16. The foul shooting of both teams throughout the game was erratic, Roosevelt cashing in on six attempts while Central made good on five.

Roosevelt always held at least an 8-point lead throughout the second half, although a brief flurry of goals by Charley Kligman and Sam Di Blasi whittled the lead to 27-21 at the opening of the fourth period, but Alvin Miller, a substitute guard, caged two quick field goals to place the game out of the Mount Pleasanters' reach.

Travis Halts Threat

Central threatened again in the fourth quarter but Ernie Travis, big Rider center, was the mainspring in an assault on the enemy basket which clinched the game.

For Lynn Woodworth, Central coach, the game was a type of "homecoming," as he formerly coached at Roosevelt and dearly cherished a victory. He substituted numerously but to no avail. Coach Herman Litman likewise substituted freely.

Eastern Triumphs

Whatever hopes Eastern had of wading through its interhigh competition with the ease of 1939 faded with the Indian struggle. For three quarters there was exactly one basket difference in the score of the two teams. The Tide never had a chance to "breathe" its regulars, and by the same token, neither did Anacostia.

At the end of three quarters the respective scores were 8-6, 16-14 and 26-24, all in the Tide's favor. Then, despite the loss of Moe Shulman, whose ankle was injured on the first play of the final quarter, Eastern began putting on the pressure.

George Adriani, Bob Custer and Neil Craig registered field goals as the Indians were limited to a pair of foul shots. The score was 34-26 then, and the best the losers could do from then on was slice three points off that lead.

All through the game, however, until the important fourth session, the action was seesaw and exciting enough to keep fans more than satisfied. The first four-point play of the scholastic season occurred in the opening frame when Lambert Anderson raced in for a two-pointer and was fouled from behind by Joe Essex. The lanky Indian made both his free throws good.

Anderson Steals Show

It was Anderson, usually a defensive star, who stole scoring honors from his mate, Johnny Placos, and almost the game from the Tide. His 13 points came at important stages of the game. Placos, a scoring ace, was held to a mere four points.

Eastern's big guns were Custer, Essex and Shulman. The first two had nine points apiece and Shulman chipped in eight more before he was forced to retire. The only substitution made by the Tide throughout was the replacement of Shulman with Craig, late in the game.

Hostilities were postponed for almost five minutes in the last period as officials and coaches came to an agreement about the substitution of Larry Hagan for the fourth time for Anacostia. Jack Koontz, whom he replaced, was finally charged with a technical foul for leaving the floor without permission.

The game was given a "big time" flavor at the outset when players were introduced individually. A public address system kept spectators informed of the play-by-play.

Sheehy, Iowa Coach Meet Again Tuesday

Touchdown Club Dinner Reunion for C. U. Head With Former Protege

The annual Touchdown Club dinner will be occasion for a reunion between Iowa University Coach Eddie Anderson and the man who launched him on his coaching career—the Rev. Dr. Maurice Sheehy, head of the department of religious education at Catholic University.

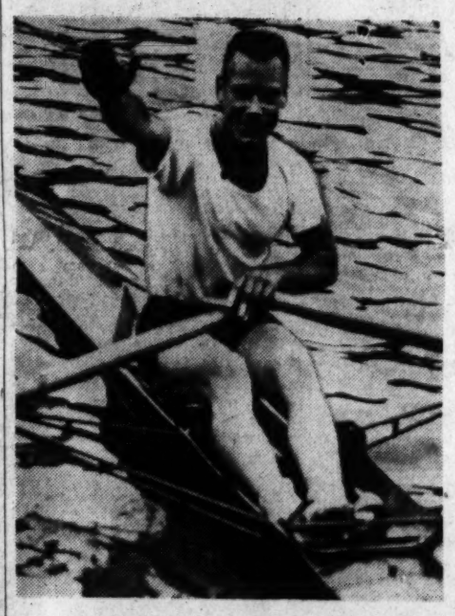
During his stay in Washington, Anderson will be the house guest of the Rev. Dr. Sheehy. It was at Columbia College, Dubuque, Iowa, that the Rev. Dr. Sheehy engaged Anderson as varsity football coach in 1922, the year following Anderson's graduation from Notre Dame.

As athletic director at Columbia College, the Rev. Dr. Sheehy was the first to detect coaching talent in the Notre Dame end and tendered him a three year contract. Coincidentally, Fod Cotton, a teammate of Anderson's at Notre Dame, was engaged as head coach at St. Ambrose College at nearby Davenport, Iowa.

The Touchdown Club dinner, scheduled for next Tuesday night at the Willard Hotel, will set a new high mark in attendance, according to early indications. Tickets, priced at $5 and obtainable from club members, are being sold at a brisk rate.

Anderson will be one of the honor guests at the dinner in company with the bright individual star of his Iowa team, Nile Kinnick. Shortly after Kinnick was voted All-American honors at the close of the season, Anderson was selected as the coach of the year.

Joe Burk Is Voted 1939 Sullivan Trophy



World's Champion Sculler, Joe Burk, waves a "hello" from his favorite racer. Yesterday he was voted annual James Sullivan Award for outstanding athlete during 1939

World's Champion Sculler's Victory in Nation-Wide Poll Breaks Monopoly of Other Sports; Fenske, Marble Are High in Balloting

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 9.—Joe Burk, world's premier sculler, today was adjudged winner of the James E Sullivan Memorial Trophy, presented annually to the athlete who by his performance, example and influence did most to promote sportsmanship during the year.

Burk, winner of famous diamond sculls at the Royal Henley Regatta in 1938 and 1939 and unbeaten in the National and Canadian regattas the last three years, was selected by a tribunal of 600 outstanding sports leaders. His victory broke the monopoly track, tennis and golf athletes have had on the trophy since it was first presented to Bobby Jones in 1930.

A year ago the University of Pennsylvania graduate, now rowing for the Penn A. C. of Philadelphia, was third to Don Lash and Katherine Rawls Thompson. This time, however, he compiled 1,063 points on a 5-3-1 basis for a comfortable margin over Charles Fenske, Wisconsin miler, and Alice Marble, national and Wimbledon tennis champion the last two years.

Fenske, conqueror of the world's best in the Princeton mile last spring, received 851 votes and Miss Marble, 826. Bud Ward, United States amateur golf champion, was fourth with 255, and Al Patnick, Ohio State diver, fifth with 243. These five were selected for final consideration from an original list of 17.

Six of the nine previous awards went to track stars—Barney Berlinger in 1931; Jim Bausch, 1932; Glenn Cunningham, 1933; Bill Bonthron, 1934; Glen Morris, 1936, and Lash last year. Jones and Lawson Little, winner in 1935, claimed the trophy for the golfers, while Don Budge won in 1937 as the result of his tennis sweep.

Western High Triumphs Over Devitt, 23-15

Winners Come From Behind in Last Half; Karas Paces Victors

Only two Devitt Prep cagers were able to score yesterday as Western High, seeking its sixth triumph of the season, took a 23-15 victory on its home floor.

Archie Panago, former Central High star, tallied all but four of the Devitt points, and the rest went to "Punchy" Kemp, veteran guard. Eight Westerners contributed to the winning cause, Jimmy Karas leading the attack with 5 points.

With its second string playing the leading role, Western faded in the first half and allowed Devitt a 12-9 lead. After the intermission, however, the first team took over and won almost as it pleased. In seven games so far the Red Raiders have lost but one engagement, that with the George Washington U. freshmen to start off the year.

Billy Conn Opens Heavyweight Title Campaign Tonight

New York, Jan. 9.—Billy Conn, of Pittsburgh, the ring's glamour boy who won the light-heavyweight crown last year, launches his 1940 campaign in the heavyweight division tomorrow night, hoping to capture Joe Louis' championship this year.

Conn, packing more poundage and reportedly more dynamite, squares off against Henry Cooper, of Brooklyn, in a 12-round bout at Madison Square Garden.

Although Billy expects to scale 175 pounds, the light-heavy limit, he will be spotting Cooper approximately 15 pounds. Cooper, a dangerous lad who has beaten Wild Bill Boyd and Buddy Knox within the past few months, will scale about 190. Naturally, Conn's title will not be at stake.

Phone Call Lands Buck Newsom on A Tiger Contract

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Jan. 9.—Louis (Buck) Newsom, big righthanded pitcher who chalked up 20 victories for the Detroit Tigers, last season, signed a 1940 contract today, Walter O. Briggs, jr., vice president of the Detroit Baseball Co., announced today.

Newsom came to Detroit from his home at Hartsville, S. C., and signed after a telephone conversation with Owner Walter O. Briggs of the Tigers, who is spending the winter at Miami Beach, Fla. Terms were not disclosed.

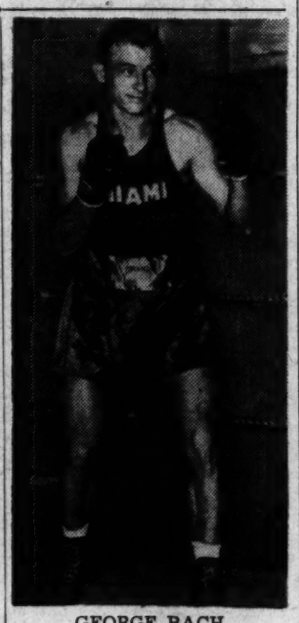
C. U. Boxing Record Threatened by Miami

Floridians to Invade Saturday; La Fond Has Several Worries



GEORGE BACH, Miami 145-Pounder

Thoughts of Miami generally call up visions of balmy breezes and bathing beauties, but reports from the Florida resort yesterday sent only cold chills down the spine of Eddie LaFond, who is striving to whip his Catholic University boxing squad into shape for its Saturday night date with Miami University.

Undefeated last year, the Cardinals are in danger of having their record sullied in the inaugural of their sixteenth boxing season in Brookland Gymnasium, according to reports from Miami—at least that's LaFond's view of the situation from a coaching standpoint.

But for a slight handicap in the heavyweight division, the Cards' boxing squad appears to be as powerful an aggregation as any team which has ever represented Catholic University. LaFond, however, sees trouble in the lighter divisions.

LaFond's main fret is the story that Miami's Coach Bill Regan has a 220-pound heavyweight and a squad of powerful hitters in the other divisions.

Turner Moves Up

If this is the situation, then Jay Turner, 175-pounder, will be in for a tough night Saturday. LaFond's big heavyweight wheelhorse, Julius Stanges, is still nursing a football injury, and the C. U. mentor has been forced to move Turner up to fill the shoes of Stanges, who went undefeated last year.

To top off his troubles, LaFond will have to move Fred "Bingo" Stant, national intercollegiate 165-pound champion who is undefeated in two years of competition, up to Turner's spot. Turner, a powerful hitter himself, may be overmatched against the Miami 220-pounder, LaFond fears.

Because of his record, Stant will be in a more favorable position despite the fact he will be out of his class. He will be thrown against "Red" Cameron, regular guard on the Hurricane eleven. The two played opposite each other in the line last fall in C. U.'s football invasion of Miami, and Stant isn't particularly upset by the prospect of facing him in the ring.

Strang Lost Once

Gerry Strang, a natural 160-pounder, will fill Stant's shoes. He lost only one decision last year when he had to shed about 7 pounds to fight in the 155-pound class. He is touted as one of the outstanding college boxers in the East, and only the fact that he happened to come along in the same weight division with such a great fighter as Stant has held him back.

Capt. Joe Bunsa, whose only defeat in two years was to Maryland's Frank Cronin last season, will be in the 155-pound class. A stiff puncher, Joe went to the semifinals of the national tourney in Wisconsin before a questionable decision eliminated him.

As far as the lighter classes are concerned, a question mark exists for LaFond. Battle for starting berths is a wide open affair and at present Lenny Bartone, 125-pounder, and Huck Hughes, welterweight, are the only tentative starters below the 155-pound class.

Leafs Down Americans, 3-2; Tie for Lead

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 9.—The Toronto Maple Leafs pumped home three goals in a riotous second period tonight to deefat the last-place New York Americans, 3-2, and go into a three-way tie with the Boston Bruins and New York Rangers for first place in the National Hockey League.

Forced to battle from behind when Harvey Jackson scored for the Americans in the second minute of play, the Leafs withstood two misconduct penalties and got the tying marker while Murph Chamberlain served his for pushing around Referee Ted Graham. The winning goal was fired late in the period by Bob Davidson to climax a pretty play to the goal mouth by Bill Taylor.

Bruins Stop Wings, 3-1, Before 10,000

Boston, Jan. 9 (AP).—The Boston Bruins finished the first half of their National Hockey League season in a top place tie tonight by outplaying the Detroit Red Wings by a wide margin for a 3-to-1 victory before about 10,000 at the Boston Garden.

Blackhawks Blank Canadiens, 2 to 0

Montreal, Jan. 9 (AP).—Rookie Paul Goodman chalked up his second shutout in the six games he has worked for the Chicago Black Hawks as the Hawks won a National Hockey League thriller by 2 to 0 over the Montreal Canadiens before 4,500 fans tonight.

Cherner Motor Bowlers Take League Lead

Last night's action in the Chevy Chase Commercial League brought a new leader. The Cherner Motor Co. bowlers gained the top when Pure Food took two games from Stubox, knocking the latter club off the top of the ladder. F. Lambert was the star for Cherner's, taking a high game with 167 and high set with 391. Boettler, of Hot Shop, also rolled a 391 set. The A and W. gang also counted for high team game of 636 and high team set of 1,809.

SILVER SPRING

One record was set and another approached in the Silver Spring American League. Otto's Grill turned in a new high team game of 675 and a set of 1,849. The record for set is 1,857. Perry Sprickler led the Grillmen with a 390 set. Mike Avon rolled 403 for Liberty, which lost three to Otto's.

ARCADIA

Margaret Willard, of Keller Memorial, had a 121 game and a 315 set in the Lutheran Church Ladies' League. High team game went to St. Paul with 479. Keller took high team set with 1,407.

LUCKY STRIKE

Nellie Schroth starred in the Ladies' Catholic League. Rolling for St. Gabriel's, she led her team to a sweep over St. Anthony's B by getting 127 and 373. Naomi Farrall, of St. Francis, which dropped two to Holy Cross D, turned in 134 and 359. St. Francis tops the league.

The United States Housing Authority first-half honors went to Accounts which nosed out Office Service on total pins. Dick Hausman, of the latter team rolled 143 and 361.

In the Agriculture Forest Service Mixed League, Paul Brannan turned in 146 and 345, while Alice McQuinn had 139 and 340. Bill Wagner set a new flat game mark of 95.

No. 4 Fives Take 2 Games From No. 5

Police Boys Club, No. 4, earned revenge for its football defeat at the hands of No. 5 yesterday when it won easy victories in both the 135 and 105-pound classes of the Metropolitan Police B. C. cage league. The 135-pounders took a 33-19 judgment and the 105-pounders scored, 40-12.

Golden Gloves Fights Start Tonight

Braddock Is Guest As 14 Scraps Launch 7th Annual Tourney

The seventh annual Golden Gloves boxing tournament swings into action tonight at Turner's Arena to the tune of thudding fists from 28 aspirants for honors, with Jimmy Braddock, former world's heavyweight champion, as the featured guest.

Looking in the pink of condition, Jersey Jim arrived too late to participate in the weighing-in ceremonies at the Knights of Columbus Hall. But after all of the 60 novice contenders had left the gym, Braddock fraternized with members of the Golden Gloves Committee, and spoke briefly at a get-together of the Georgetown Glee Club, which was entertaining several hundred people in a nearby auditorium of the K. of C.

Said Braddock: "I regret that I was unable to go to college, but I did attend the college of hard knocks. I'm glad to be back here

Time Please, $5.50 Favorite, Takes Final Tropical Feature

King Farm's Gelding Wins By 3 Lengths

Idle Elf Is Second; Patsey Begone Third; Stand Alone Takes Opener, Pays $18.40

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., Jan. 9.—The most successful early meeting staged by the Gables Racing Association since its inception in 1931 came to a close here this afternoon. No stakes were carded during the 17-day session, but interest never lagged.

The Bird Road Purse of 6 furlongs, for $2,500 platers, served as the getaway feature and resulted in a popular triumph for the King Farm's Time Please, the $5.50-for-$2 favorite in the field of six. The gelding prevailed by three lengths under Porter Roberts, completing the distance over a dull track in 1:12 4-5. Mrs. H. C. Rumage's Idle Elf outlasted J. Y. Pyle's Patsey Begone ridden by Don Meade by a head for the place.

Stones Landing and Patsey Begone vied for the early lead, the pair racing heads apart for a half-mile while Time Please was being faultlessly rated not far behind. The latter charged around the fading leaders approaching the stretch turn and shot into the clear entering the home lane. He drew farther away without being punished. Idle Elf spurted in time to nip Patsey Begone, with the latter easily third best.

A dozen maiden 3-year-olds of the plater division went postward for the opening dash of 6 furlongs. Stand Alone, an $18.40 for $2 chance, representing the Calumet Farm of Warren Wright raced to an easy victory.

Including today's handle of $287,017 the total amount wagered at the 17-day meeting was $4,476,093, for a daily average of $263,300. The total for this meeting was more than $1,000,000 above the first 17 days of the 20-day session a year ago and the daily average went up approximately $60,000.

STAND ALONE gained steadily rounding the turn under strong pressure while saving ground, drew out in the final furlong, but was doing his best at the finish. SATIATION, on the outside, forced a brisk pace from the start, held on well in the final drive, but was no match for the winner. GAY HOUR, slow to begin, slipped through on the inside entering the stretch and outlasted TEN-O-HEARTS. The latter showed speed, but faltered in the last eighth.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:36. Off 2:42. Winner, Mrs. L. V. Bellew, sr.'s, ch. f. (4), by Greenock—Agnes Call. Trained by L. V. Bellew, sr. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MALINDA B., $4.40, $2.70, $2.30; WHISPER, $5.00, $3.70; FICKLE FAIRY, $4.60.

MALINDA B. unruly at the post, broke forwardly, followed the pace closely, but was carried very wide entering the stretch and finished gamely when straightened out to wear WHISPER down in the last stride. WHISPER, prominent throughout, assumed command entering the stretch, but could not withstand the winner's bid. FICKLE FAIRY, rushed to the front, bore out on the stretch turn and then faltered right at the end. FUMBLE broke tardily and made a bold bid entering the stretch, but could not get up.

Daily Double, STAND ALONE and MALINDA B., Paid $59.30.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LIFE GUARD, $14.40, $6.30, $4.30; WEEPOR, $4.50, $3.60; FAIR TIME, $3.40.

LIFE GUARD, slow to get going, swung around the leaders entering the stretch, finished fast and won going away. WEEPOR, nearest in pursuit of the pace throughout, responded gamely to punishment to outlast FAIR TIME. The latter showed the most speed, saved ground the entire trip and had no excuses. CLAPAIR could not get up.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:38. Off 3:41. Winner, J. Berman's b. f. (3), by Swift and Sure—Diagnosis. Trained by J. Bauer. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SURE CURE, $5.10, $3.10, $2.60; NEDDIE LASS, $4.30, $3.30; KING NEPTUNE, $3.90.

SURE CURE, rated behind the leaders while saving ground all the way, drew clear with a rush entering the stretch, but then faltered and just lasted. NEDDIE LASS, keen contender all the way, was carried wide into the stretch, came again when straightened out and would have won in another stride. KING NEPTUNE responded to punishment and outlasted HUGOOD. The latter, slow to begin, closed a big gap.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $900; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 4:07. Off 4:09½. Winner, King Farm's b. g. (4), by Pharamond II—Hello. Trained by M. Jolly. Value to winner, $650; second, $150; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 1:12⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TIME PLEASE, $5.50, $3.20, $2.50; IDLE ELF, $3.50, $2.70; PATSEY BEGONE, $3.20.

TIME PLEASE gained steadily on the outside after leaving the backstretch, opened up a winning lead entering the stretch, but was ridden out smartly by the end. IDLE ELF, a forward factor while saving ground, finished with good courage and outlasted PATSEY BEGONE. The latter, rushed to the front while saving ground, faltered when the final test came. LIFELIKE passed tired horses.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:34½. Off 4:36½. Winner, B. F. Mechling's br. c. (4), by Happy Time—Greysteel. Trained by W. G. Merion. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MY FIRST, $7.40, $4.00, $3.10; WISE DECISION, $3.90, $2.90; TAUT, $3.70.

MY FIRST held his opposition safe for speed and, rated in front, held sway after a shaking up entering the stretch. WISE DECISION, always in near pursuit of the leader, responded gamely to pressure, but never could reach the winner. TAUT, well up all the way, bore out entering the stretch, but came again and held the others safe. KAPTIME closed a big gap from a slow beginning.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:13. Off 5:14½. Winner, Lucky Teter's b. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—GRAND MARIE, $43.00, $15.90, $9.40; TONEY'S GIRL, $8.40, $4.80; MAJOR-MINOR, $3.20.

GRAND MARIE, away slowly, began to better her position on the outside in the last half mile and wore the leaders down in the closing strides. TONEY'S GIRL forced the pace and took a short lead rounding the last turn and finished gamely. MAJOR-MINOR, prominent throughout, saved ground entering the stretch, but faltered in the last 20 yards. MANY FLAGS slipped through on the inside, but could not get up.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:41. Off 5:42½. Winner, J. F. Quinn's b. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LACKAWANNA, $13.70, $7.40, $4.50; SMILING PRINCE, $37.40, $17.90; RED ROGUE, $3.60.

LACKAWANNA, away forwardly, was sent to the front rounding out of the backstretch, continued stoutly in the last quarter mile and was not seriously threatened. SMILING PRINCE improved his position after the first half mile, made a bold charge in the final drive, but was no match for the winner. RED ROGUE, bothered in the run to the first turn, ran a nice race. HARPEN BELLE stopped under pressure. SPEED never was a factor.

Selections at Hialeah.

Dear Al:

Racing moves over to the wonder plant today. Lots of flowers and flamingoes, or is it flamingos or flamingi. We hope it means lots of winners. Funny thing about a race track. In the estimation of most bettors, a track never is beautiful unless they are winners. It is a fact that Marlboro looks like Saratoga to a guy who is $100 ahead. I can remember one day at Cumberland, when I was so far ahead that I thought that man on the speaker system had a voice like Judy Garland when we all know he sounds like Andy Devine. Despite recent rains, Hialeah sent the track condition out as "fast." A bright sun and a brisk wind was helping the big track crew, George Odom and the horses of Marshall Field, Mrs. W. Plunket Stewart and Robert L. Gerry arrived from Columbia, S. C. Sir Damion, being pointed for the $50,000 added Widener, was among the dozen horses. I understand that Sonny Workman, Washington jockey, is leaving for Florida. He will get in shape on the golf courses and may take some mounts before the long session is over. Funny thing, but Deduce, a horse which has been a question to the favorite players, has a perfect question mark on his forehead, tapering down over the muzzle. He is the easiest horse in Florida to identify. Here's another oddity: W. E. Collins' Singing Slave is a mare which loves oranges. Her owner rolls an orange along the ground as she is walking, and the horse pursues it quickly, chewing rind and all, gracefully ejecting the seeds. If you think that is a tall story, then blame Vincent Treanor, who has been doing the publicity for Tropical Park. Fred Hellman, of Washington, D. C., arrived with Mr. and Mrs. Moe Simon. They are well known in turf circles. Dunc McDermid reports that Jair and Tugboat Frank are recovering from injuries. Tropical showed an increase of 25 per cent in betting and, strange to say, it seems, a 35 per cent of winning favorites. The horses return to Tropical on March 4 for a 33-day session that ends April 10. Until then—good time Hialeah. BILL.

First race—Lady Jaffa will have Mike Caffarella, the crack apprentice, in the saddle and may be the right one in the first juvenile race of the new year. Lady Jaffa, by War Hero—Jaffa, is owned by A. G. Weston and has speed. Perigee, a daughter of Sir Gallahad III and Apogee, may be second. Babs, by Bull Dog—Barbaria, for the show end.

Second race—Sun Apollo has done about everything asked, and the change of tracks should not affect his speed. Arcaro will do the riding and I believe this one can handle the 115-pound assignment. Bachelor's Bower has shown fair form and is dangerous. A feather impost gives Grand Light a chance.

Third race—Picture Play gets my call in this field. Donoso will be in charge of the saddle assignment and the price may be a good one. Hard Loser and Stagefright for the place and show.

Fourth race—Taxes is tossed in with 104 pounds and I understand that Caffarella will do the booting. Looks like the spot for a crackdown. Busy Morn will do a lot of running and will take it all if I have picked the wrong day for the top one. Go Home should be in the pay circle.

Fifth race—The Calumet Farm entry of Easy Mon and Count Morse appears best in this 7-furlong test. Of course, I'm expecting the first named to provide most of the punch. Dolly Val improved with leaps and bounds at the other track and could surprise. Armor Bearer for the show position.

Sixth race—Just what kind of a watch was being used, I don't know, but the clocker says that Ambrose Light worked 6 furlongs in 1:12 1-5 over this track. That kind of speed would take a race like this. Regardless of price, I'm going to string along. Speed to Spare, with Meade up, looms as the one to beat. Lady Maryland for third.

Seventh race—Sun Mica should like the turf course. Gets a moderate weight assignment and I see no season for mistakes. Conrad Mann loved the Tropical track and is fit. Pari Call should be in the money.

Eighth race—Short Distance and Mucho Gusto figure to battle it out for the chief money in this field. I prefer them in the order named. Balloter to take down part of the pay.

Best bet—Sun Mica.

Hauser to Play, Manage

Sheboygan, Wisc., Jan. 9 (AP).—Joe Hauser, first baseman who formerly played with the Philadelphia Athletics and with several American Association clubs, signed a contract today to become playing-manager of the Sheboygan Chairmakers of the Wisconsin State League, newly formed Class D circuit.

Hialeah Park Opens 46-Day Meet Today

Officials Confident Money Wagered to Surpass Last Year's Total of $21,786,000

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Jan. 9.—The Florida thoroughbred racing scene shifted tonight to swank Hialeah Park, where officials confidently predicted more than last year's $21,786,000 would be wagered during a 46-day meeting.

The prediction was based on a banner tourist season and the fact that Tropical Park closed its early 17-day meet today with an almost $1,000,000 increase, representing about 25 per cent, in pari-mutuel play.

Beautifully lanscaped Hialeah, with its tropical foliage and pink flamingoes, will climax its season March 2 with a renewal of the $50,000 added Widener Challenge Cup in which Challedon is expected to meet some of the Nation's better handicap horses.

$5,000 Inaugural 'Cap

Interest tonight, however, centered on tomorrow's $5,000 added Inaugural Handicap, first of 11 stake races with purse money totaling over $100,000.

The Woolford Farm's Joe Schenck was assigned the top impost of 122 pounds among 18 entries in the 6-furlong sprint for 3-year-olds and up. Joe Schenck was coupled with Robert L., another Woolford horse which drew 119 pounds.

Calumet Farm's Easy Mon, carrying 120-pounds, was well regarded with several other candidates, including Mrs. P. A. B. Widener's French veteran, Ambrose Light; Mrs. E. Graham Lewis' Great Union; Circle M Ranch's Speed to Spare; Gustave Ring's Lady Maryland, and F. J. Buchanan's Charlieinfield.

Meade to Ride

Don Meade, the Nation's leading rider last year, was assigned the mount on Speed to Spare, weighted at 119 pounds. Jockey Wayne Wright was to ride Ambrose Light, winner of many European stakes during a seven-year career. Ambrose Light was given a 120-pound impost.

Lady Maryland, with F. A. Smith up, was considered the country's leading mare in 1939. The 6-year-old will carry 115 pounds. Charlieinfield, to be ridden by C. Rollins, got in at 108 pounds and was well supported because of recent brisk workouts.

Local Banks Elect Nine New Directors

Riggs National and Union Trust Each Add Three to Board

At the annual meetings of stockholders of national banks in Washington held yesterday, as well as of several trust companies and savings banks, nine new directors were added to the various boards. The Riggs National Bank elected three new board members, as did the Union Trust Co. The Hamilton National Bank, the Washington Loan & Trust Co. and the Security Savings and Commercial Bank each elected a new director.

Riggs National

Riggs National Bank shareholders elected Morris Cafritz, president of the Cafritz Construction Co.; Edward D. Ferriss, president of the Capital Transit Co., and William E. Schmid, president of Julius Garfinckel & Co., Inc., as new members of the board. Other directors were re-elected as follows:

H. Rozier Dulany, Sterling Ruffin, Charles C. Glover, jr., Henry B. Spencer, Fleming Newbold, C. Powell Minnigerode, William M. Ritter, Harry F. Clark, Frank J. Hogan, Robert V. Fleming, Coleman Jennings, John Oliver Lagorce, Charles H. Tompkins, Henry P. Erwin, Daniel J. Callahan, William McClellan, Ernest E. Norris, Lloyd B. Wilson, George O. Vass, Hilleary G. Hoskinson and Walter G. Dunlop.

Union Trust Co.

The three new directors elected by stockholders of the Union Trust Co. were J. E. Heberle, vice president and controller of the Capital Transit Co.; Charles D. Hayes, of the law firm of Hayes & Hayes, and Frederick J. Hoos, member of the firm of John I. Hoos Co., Inc., in the Metropolitan Bank Building. Members of the board, who were re-elected, include:

Washington Loan & Trust Co.

William H. Baden, Hiram Bingham, Frederick M. Bradley, John H. Clapp, Charles H. Doing, L. Whiting Estes, George M. Fisher, Melville B. Grosvenor, George P. Hoover, Samuel H. Kauffmann, Carl B. Kefferstein, Alfred H. Lawson, James Alexander Lyon, Harry G. Meem, Theodore W. Noyes, A. Chambers Oliphant, William E. Pearson, Arthur Peter, Walter S. Pratt, jr.; Tenny Ross, John Rutherford, Charles G. Treat, Thomas H. Welsh and Donald Woodward.

In the recent death of John A. Johnston, the Washington Loan & Trust Co. lost a director who had rendered very valuable service to the bank for about 40 years. The new director, Dr. Davis, is a widely known eye physician.

Hamilton National

W. R. Forster, for several years one of the vice presidents of the Hamilton National Bank, was added to the directorate at the annual meeting of the stockholders yesterday. All members of the old board were re-elected as follows:

Edward C. Baltz, Thomas N. Beavers, Emery H. Bogley, William H. Clarke, Arthur L. Day, Charles B. Dulcan, sr.; Joshua Evans, jr.; Edwin C. Graham, Maurice E. Horton, Howard W. Kacy, Ralph W. Lee, Wilfred B. Putman, Charles C. Rogers, Horace G. Smithy, Leonard P. Steuart, Wilmer J. Waller, Chester Wells and Roger J. Whiteford.

Security Savings & Commercial

Stockholders of the Security Savings & Commercial Bank elected Edwin Jacobson, senior partner in the firm of Jacobson Bros. builders, a new member of the board. All members of the old board were re-elected as follows:

Francis G. Addison, jr.; Dion S. Birney, Samuel S. Blick, James A. Councilor, Diller F. Groff, Rudolph T. Harrell, George E. Judd, T. Hunton Leith, Fred McKee, R. Carl Mitchell, Benjamin Ourisman, Col. Julius I. Peyser, Stacy M. Reed, Morris Simon, William W. Spalding and Judge Milton Strasburger.

The new board organized at once and re-elected all officers as follows: Julius I. Peyser, chairman of board; Francis G. Addison, jr., president; Fred McKee, vice president; T. Hunton Leith, second vice president and cashier; J. Hanson Beall, John O. Lehmann, Joseph L. Shipley and Charles K. West, assistant cashiers.

National Metropolitan

National Metropolitan Bank stockholders re-elected these directors for the coming year: Louis D. Bliss, William F. Gude, A. A. Hoehling, William J. Hughes, jr.; John B. Hyde, C. F. Jacobsen, Charles Jacobsen, R. M. Kauffmann, Dr. J. Thomas Kelley, jr.; Maj. Henry Leonard, Felix Morley, Frank F. Nesbit, Arthur A. O'Brien, James O'Donnell, C. F. R. Ogilby, Merle Thorpe, Henry A. Willard 2d; Stanley D. Willis and W. K. Wimsatt.

Lincoln National

George I. Borger, William W. Brawner, Floyd E. Davis, Albert S. Gatley, W. W. Griffith, Franklin W. Harper, Melvin C. Hazen, Leroy W. Herron, Richard A. Norris, Howard R. Norton, Henry T. Offterdinger, George C. Pumphrey, John Saul, Fred A. Smith, James A. Soper, W. McK. Stowell, Channing S. Walker,

New Year Cash $57.71 Per Person

By the Associated Press

The average American started out 1940 with $57.51 in cash. Except for a few days when the banks were closed in March, 1933, this was the highest per capita money circulation recorded. It was 84 cents more than a month ago and $5.25 more than a year ago.

Altogether, the Treasury said, there was $7,597,880,264 of money in circulation outside the Treasury and Federal Reserve banks on New Year's Day, and an estimated 131,651,000 persons to share it.

Cotton Prices Yield to Lack Of Buy Orders

New York, Jan 9 (AP).—Cotton futures declined today, but it was due more to halting demand than active selling. Final prices were off 3 to 9 points. Setbacks in foreign cotton markets gave buyers their cue at the start. When security prices started to drift lower, they showed still less inclination to get in the market.

Offerings from large spot interests, mostly hedges, supplied the bulk of contracts. A little foreign demand helped the list at the outset.

Secretary Wallace's statement that "unless the $45,000,000,000 limitation on the national debt is lifted, a new source will have to be found for funds with which to make farm parity payments," stirred considerable comment around the ring.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures steadily worked their way lower to final losses of 10 to 13 points today.

Pressure followed the downward slant in lard, grains, stocks and hogs. Shorts covered and the trade bought as the market declined.

Sales totaled 160 lots; March, 6.98 bid; May, 7.09; July, 7.18.

Crude oil was quoted 5⅛@6 cents a pound bid across the belt. The price shading followed action of futures and reports of slack consumer interest.

Listed Bond Values Higher for Year

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—The bond market closed out 1939 with a total market value of $49,919,813,386 for the 1,395 issues listed in the New York Stock Exchange, a compilation issued by the exchange disclosed today. This compared with 1,393 issues having a market value of $47,053,034,224 at the end of 1938.

At the end of November, 1939, a total of 1,396 issues had a market value of $47,839,377,778.

Aldrich Urges Return of Gold To Circulation

Price Should Be Basis For World's Currencies, Says Chase Bank Head

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 9.—Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of Chase National Bank, recommended today the return of gold to free circulation in the United States.

"We are already," he told the bank's shareholders at their annual meeting, "the possessors of 60 per cent of the world's monetary gold stock. Before peace can be achieved this share may have risen further. In a large sense we are and will be the conservators of the world's monetary system.

"It is for this reason, as well as for ample reasons of our own, that we must take action now to preserve the monetary character of gold. As I see it, our immediate function is to re-establish a free gold market permitting free movement of gold bars and gold currency both inward and outward, so that the price of gold as here established shall constitute a firm and certain base line from which the values of the diverse currencies of the world can be confidently figured."

Five Billions Idle

Aldrich said that, with more than $5,000,000,000 of excess reserves, the Nation's banks were hard pressed to loan out their money.

Much the same opinion was expressed in the annual report of James H. Perkins, chairman of the National City Bank, as he told that institution's shareholders of 1939 net earnings of $17,642,169 compared with $10,547,750 in 1938.

"The excess of our cash reserves above legal requirements," reported Perkins, "has been greater than we have ever before carried. This reflects large gold imports and the continued lack of demand for loans on a scale commensurate with our resources.

"We are continuing to make vigorous efforts to lend our money to acceptable borrowers. An increase in serial loans and in the aggregate of our personal loans and consumer credit financing has, however, barely offset the decline in other loans."

Armour Turns 1½ Million Loss To 7 Million Profit

Chicago, Jan. 9 (AP).—Armour Co. reported today for the fiscal year ended October 28, 1939, consolidated net earnings of $7,012,057, compared with a loss of $1,505,089 in the previous year.

The consolidated net earnings, which were slightly less than annual requirements for preferred dividends, consisted of a profit of $7,706,630 earned by Armour Co. of Delaware and its subsidiaries, and a loss of $694,573 sustained by the parent company, Armour Co. (Illinois) and its subsidiaries exclusive of Armour Co. of Delaware.

Dividends on the 7 per cent guaranteed cumulative preferred stock of Armour Co. of Delaware, amounting to $3,746,890, were paid during the year. Dividends on the two preferred issues of the Illinois company have not been paid since January, 1938.

Sales in 1939 totaled $715,318,909—about 1 per cent less than in 1938, while tonnage was about 1 per cent larger than in 1938.

Servel Inc.

New York, Jan. 9.—Sales of Servel, Inc., makers of gas refrigerators, were $21,174,123, according to the company's annual report to stockholders issued today. The net profits, previously reported, were $2,926,265 after all charges and Federal tax, equivalent, after provision for dividends on the preferred stock (since redeemed) to $1.61 a share on 1,781,426 shares of $1 par value common stock outstanding.

The volume of net sales showed a 12.2 per cent increase over the previous year, although "substantial reductions were made during the year in the selling prices of the smaller household refrigerators." The report states that "the increase in profits was accomplished through increased sales, economies in manufacturing costs, and careful control of all other expenses."

The Market

By C. Norman Stabler
A Special Correspondent.

Prices Droop in Political Uncertainty; Roosevelt Could Win Again, Wall St. View; Treasury Issues Continue in Demand

New York, Jan. 9.—The Wall Street reaction to the words of Jackson Day speakers claimed the attention of investors today, and interest centered chiefly around the prediction of one stock exchange firm, the head of which has strong Washington connections that there is little chance for a Republican victory this fall if Roosevelt chooses to run again.

In another firm a partner remarked that if the President, in his Jackson Day address, had followed in the footsteps of Mr. Coolidge, and removed the present uncertainty by withdrawing himself, we would have had a 2,000,000 share day on the upside. Instead we had another bearish day and the ticker sputtered along on a turnover of only 671,350 shares. There was not a single group of stocks on the big board that averaged higher and the market as a whole recorded a net loss of 0.46 point.

Business News Favorable

The irregular decline stems directly from the uncertainty in domestic politics, for business is doing as well as could be expected at this season of the year. Declines that have taken place in the major indices since the turn of the year have been well within the bounds of seasonal expectations.

But in politics it is a different story and that is what is making the path of investors a hard road to travel. The overwhelming opinion in downtown Manhattan is that the series of Federal deficits, the experiments in our fiscal affairs, the fostering of class hatred and the continued opposition to private business make it essential that the country turn to a more conservative group of law makers. But there is no assurance that such will be done and that is the big reason for the present state of pessimism in Wall Street.

The prediction mentioned above, which was given greater significance because of the unofficial connection between the head of the firm and the Administration, said that "business on the whole still hopes Roosevelt will not run again. If he does not, there will be a good chance of a Republican victory. If he does, there will not be much of a chance unless the President does something to lose his popularity with the people, which, incidentally, has grown more since his message to Congress. It is doubtful the President will let anyone "put him in the campaign" for his best position is to be "drafted" after Garner, Hull and others killed each other off."

Monetary Meddling

This sums up the opinion of most of those in the street, and the prospect is not a promising one. It holds the prospect of another four years of monetary meddling and mounting deficits, with consequent rising taxes and the corollary of small profits and reduced standards of living. The turn of events in the European war and in domestic business take second place as factors shaping the course of security markets while the third term question remains unanswered.

The market today was in accord with the above. Steels, oils, aviations and rails bore the brunt of selling pressure but in most cases the declines were fractional. Exceptions included a 4-point break in Allied Chemical and declines of about a point each in C. & O., Chrysler, du Pont, Harvester, Manville, Sears and United Aircraft. Steel and Bethlehem were down good fractions, as was General Motors.

United States Bonds Firm

An easier tone prevailed in most listed domestic bonds today with volume of dealings slightly higher than in the preceding session. In contrast with this tone in the general list Treasurys were firm in light trading.

Gains in Governments ranged up to 11-32 on the Stock Exchange at the close and in the over-counter market final prices showed advances up to 9-32.

Among foreign loans Finland 6s of 1945 were a strong spot with a gain of 5 points. Danish and Norwegian bonds shared in the gains and Canadians were firm.

An exception to the generally easier tendency in rail issues was seen in the Morris & Essex group, where gains up to 1½ points were registered. Local traction bonds were steady around previous closing levels. Shell Union debentures were active and firmer.

Holleman Agency Wins Home Life Award

Announcing a 30 per cent increase in new paid business for 1939, Vernon W. Holleman, Washington general agent for the Home Life Insurance Co. of New York, reported yesterday that the agency's new paid production was in excess of $2,000,000. Mr. Holleman also said that his agency had been awarded for permanent keeping the company's consistent producers' plaque, for having won in the last three quarters of the year the best record of consistent monthly production on the part of agents under contract in all of the company's agencies throughout the United States.

In celebration of last year's accomplishment the agency held its annual dinner last night, with William P. Worthington, superintendent of agencies, the guest of honor.

Willkie a Director Of N. Y. First National

New York, Jan. 9 (AP).—Wendell L. Willkie, president of Commonwealth & Southern Corp., was elected to the board of directors of First National Bank of New York, it was announced at the annual stockholders' meeting today. Willkie's election increased the number of directors to 11 from 10.

The president of the bank, Leon Fraser, told stockholders net income of the bank in 1939 amounted to $10,407,174. The balance added to undivided profits amounted to $407,174. This compared with 1938 net profit of $10,865,199.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 9.—Profit taking cut into recently buoyant gilt-edged securities in the stock market today. The general list at the close consequently, showed irregular price trends after opening firmness. Demand for Far Eastern loans continued vigorously up to the close. Buying of industrials was selective. Coppers and other base metals inclined lower but golds held their own.

Paris.—Prices turned upward soon after the bourse opened today but a weak strain developed near the finish. Traders were cautious pending news of Allied war policy and further changes hinted in the British cabinet shake-up.

Amsterdam.—Both domestic and American equities regained their balance near the close of the bourse session today. At the start domestic issues moved unevenly, while foreign stocks were slightly lower.

Liverpool.—Cotton futures ended 2 to 5 points lower Bombay selling was largely offset by lively trade and speculative support.

Wheat Decline Persists With Two-Cent Drop

Corn, Oats, Rye, Soy Beans and Lard Also Close Lower

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 9.—The recent wheat price decline was checked only momentarily today, after which the market slumped about 2 cents to its lowest level in two weeks.

Fundamental trade factors apparently remained unchanged so that most of the activity was of a technical nature, with the trade largely professional. Some selling was regarded as spreading operations against purchases at Winnipeg, where wheat is 10 to 15 cents cheaper, but when the downturn got under way it put into operation numerous stop-loss orders that augmented the liquidation.

Wheat rose almost a cent in early dealings, then reacted to around previous closing levels. In the final hour prices slumped about 3 cents from early highs and closed 1⅜ to 2 lower than yesterday; May, 1.01½@1.01⅝; July, 98⅜@98¾. These prices were 8 to 9 cents below the two-year peaks established December 19.

Corn closed ⅝ to ⅞ lower; May, 58¼@18⅜; July, 59@48⅞; oats, ⅛ to ½ down; soybeans, 1¾ off; rye, ⅜ to ⅝ down, and lard, 5 to 13 lower.

Gold Importations Increase in Week

Gold imports increased again last week as Canada, the major gold shipper since the war, resumed that role. The week's imports totaled $57,668,620, of which $22,769,727 came from Canada. The previous week's total was $48,178,791. Weekly gold figures have fluctuated sharply in recent weeks, because in some weeks Canada sent large shipments and in others virtually none.

In the week ended January 3, other large shipments were $7,836,955 from the Netherlands, $5,009,203 from Norway, $8,300,547 from Sweden, $4,948,139 from England and $6,059,159 from Australia.

Furr to Meet Theodorescu On Next Card

Two Will Meet in an Eight-Rounder Monday As Feature of Show

Phil Furr, who has cleaned out all the welterweight competition in the District since he launched his comeback campaign last October, will meet Milo Theodorescu (pronounced To-da-rescue), recent import from Rumania, in the eight-round headline match Monday night at Turner's Arena.

The 29-year-old Southwest fighter, who hit his greatest stride in the final 1939 boxing show with a decisive eight-round victory over Johnny Duca, will be starting for the sixth itme since fall.

Furr has proved he still has the old ability to provide a crowd-pleasing fight and that he still carries a powerful punch in either hand, although he has yet to score a knockout in his comeback. He will settle down to serious training today in the National Capial Gymnasium's new Eleventh street headquarters.

Theodorescu, in his first appearance here November 20, put on an unorthodox show of shifting fight styles to take a decision over Baltimore's Charley Gilley. He has since scored an upset victory over Carmen Notch in New York and met Jimmy Leto, Fritzie Zivic and Vince Pimpanella, well-known welters.

G-Men Battle D. & H. Five At Heurich's

A leading game of the first half Heurich Amateur Basketball League schedule will be offered as the 9:30 o'clock nightcap of a triple-header at Heurich gymnasium tonight when Dalaware and Hudson meets Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Although Delaware and Hudson, defeated but once this season and second only to the Jewish Community Center in the standings, will rule a slght favorite, FBI is conceded a fine chance of springing an upset.

Bob Faris, last season an All-America with George Washington University, is the key player of FBI and will be the man most closely watched by D. and H. Capable of rising to the heights in major games, the former Colonial star is expected to be at his best tonight.

In supporting games, Garvin's Grill engages United Clay at 7:30 o'clock and Marvin's Credit duels Bantam-Press at 8:30 o'clock.

Bonura Will Balk At Salary Slice

yet but I think I was first or second among first basemen in the league."

Reported to have received $15,000 last year for his assistance to the Giants, he would not reveal what he was offered this season, explaining "it's a secret."

It was supposed to be a secret that he was the masked, bejeweled figure who took the part of Ben Hur last night at the annual ball of the Virgilians. Identity of the kings of carnival balls is never publicly announced but the word got out today.

Zeke came riding in a chariot into the ballroom of the Municipal Auditorium driving four snow white horses in the climactic scene. The theme of the tableaux was the story of Ben Hur and Zeke, as the title figure, was king. And—"the king's costume was of silver lame and rhinestones . . . he wore boots of silver kid."

Eagles Trounce Orioles, 4 to 1

Roach, 200-pound Baltimore defense, who made a miraculously speedy recovery from the elbow infection which was supposed to keep him out of last night's game, drew a 2-minute penalty for high sticking.

Less than a minute after he returned to the ice, Courteau was back in the "meanie" box, this time together with Center Georg Grigor, of the Orioles, for a term of 5 minutes. This was for "unnecessary roughness," in other words a bit of good old-fashioned slugging. Then a minute before the period's end Courteau was detected "charging" and went back for 2 more minutes.

With the defensemen of both teams presenting a solid front to all sallies, neither showed much attack, most of the sallies ending with the puck carriers sent crashing to the ice, the puck flying askew.

Big Davies McTeer and Knipfel were prominent on defense for Washington and Dyte and George Boll were outstanding for Baltimore. Goalie Lee also played well for the Eagles.

Action was somewhat slower, but fully as rough in the second period as Washington scored twice in the early minutes and left the ice at intermission with a 2-1 advantage.

The Orioles tallied their point almost simultaneous with the buzzer ending the period and Coach Redvera Mackenzie, of Washington, protested, claiming that time had expired before the score. Official Timekeeper Graham, however, overruled him.

Mackenzie's argument was that the big clock was stuck due to the cold. Time was kept throughout the first period on a hand watch by Tom Manning, penalty timekeeper, and it showed the Baltimore goal was scored 20 seconds after time was up.

The Eagles picked up their first point while the Orioles were shorthanded. Shortly after Archambault had been sent to the box for slashing, Dewey took a corner pass from Burrage to push a shot by Goalie Omar Kelly at 8:15. Then at 10:51 the Eagles boosted their lead to 2-0 on a fast play in which Les Ramsay, assisted by Covert and Germann, beat the goalie from a difficult angle.

The Baltimore goal was made during a wild melee in front of the Washington net. Eagles' goalie, Gordon Lee, was knocked prone on the ice and players of both sides were hovering over him, shouldering and bumping each other. When Referee Bill Chadwick untangled the players he ruled Freddy Hunt had scored for the visitors at 10:57, assisted by Riley and Calladine.

Burns Scores 28 Points As D. & H. Cagers Win

Gerald Burns, Delaware & Hudson's popular center, set a new scoring mark for the Heurich gymnasium last night as D. & H. Coalmen defeated Marvin's Credit in a Heurich Amateur Basketball League game, 59 to 36. He scored 28 points.

F. B. I., paced by the 17-point scoring of Tommy Nolan, won handily over Q. & S. Laundry, 47 to 38, in the opening game.

Operating Under Uniform Small Loan Laws

Make a Loan to $300 by Phone.
COMMUNITY FINANCE CORP.
3179 Wilson Blvd., Arlington. CH. 4888.

GET OFF TO A GOOD START IN 1940!
Use our loan and finance service to pay up bills and lump all your debts into one easier-to-handle obligation. If you already have a loan, but wish more cash, we can usually arrange that, too. By consolidating all debts, you can take more time, and pay a smaller amount each month—then have more of your pay for other things. It's the sensible and approved way today.
- Reasonable credit requirements—no co-makers on most loans. People with modest salary specially invited.
- Equalized, "pocket-size" payments—more than a year to pay.
- Many loans on signature only.
- Your privacy strictly respected.
- Money in one day.
- Loans in any amount up to $300.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

"How is it possible to bid the hand below to the grand slam that is in it?" asks B. H., "or even to a small slam?

"In the game of four-handed duplicate in which it turned up one pair stopped at four hearts and the other at three no trump. It was opened with a Vanderbilt club in one case and with two hearts in the other. North dealer, neither side vulnerable; here are the cards:

	♠ A 9 8 ♡ A K Q 3 2 ◇ A 8 7 ♣ A 5
♠ K 6 2 ♡ 10 9 6 ◇ 10 9 5 3 ♣ K 7 3	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH	♠ Q J 10 7 4 ♡ J 7 5 ◇ None ♣ Q 9 8 4 2
	♠ 5 3 ♡ 8 4 ◇ K Q J 6 4 2 ♣ J 10 6

"The hand makes seven at either hearts or no trumps."

While it is not a particularly good grand-slam bid, since it requires a heart break in order to win thirteen tricks, six most certainly should be reached, the safest declaration being diamonds.

The hand might be bid to six diamonds in this manner, using an artificial jump re-bid by North rather than an opening forcing two-bid: :

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ◇	Pass
6 ◇	Pass	Pass	Pass

Leonard Named Horse Show Officer

Maj. Henry T. Leonard, vice president of the Washington Horse Show, which has been assigned the dates of May 17, 18 and 19 by the American Horse Shows Association, was named a director of the latter association in New York Monday.

Maj. Leonard, with F. Moran McConihe, secretary of the Washington Horse Show, attended the meeting of the governing body in New York as representatives of the Washington group. They will report to the Washington Horse Show at the next meeting, to be held at 4 p. m. January 18 at 1321 Connecticut avenue.

The May horse show will be held at the Meadowbrook Club, East-West highway, in Rock Creek Park, and again the proceeds are to be turned over to Washington's Junior League.

Listen! with Slocum

From time to time this pillar delves into the misspent youths of WJSV's announcing staff. Personally, we find it great fun if a little macaber. Today's study, Reginald Allen, will prove no exception.

R. ALLEN

The pangs of hunger and a Theater Guild stage director who murdered more coolies than the Sun Emporer's invading hordes set our Mr. Allen in the path of righteousness and radio. Reginald's early life was spent batting his well-combed head against Broadway's doors and it seemed he was getting somewhere when he was cast in a Theater Guild production of "The Good Earth"—he and about 150 others were coolies.

The mortality rate of this company was pretty dreadful. First the director hired the coolies, cast a jaundiced eye at the mob one morning, strode majestically through its middle and fired everybody who wound up on his left. Allen was on his left. Reggy was somewhat surprised to learn later that in Pittsburgh the director knocked off 50 more coolies and when the play came to New York the critics knocked off the show.

In 1934 he abandoned the temptations and sporadic feedings of the big city and took a job as announcer in Durham, N. C. A year later he progressed over to WBT, Charlotte, and in 1938 came on to Washington and WJSV.

A man's clothing, like his bookmaker's balance, is pretty much his own business, but Reginald's clothes should not be passed by in the interests of Emily Post. He wears cowboy clothes in the Bond Street manner. Beautifully cut suits, perfectly kept and quite sedate are wrapped around Washington's most beautiful collection of violet and searing cerise shirts. He definitely does not look the part, but Reginald is an aviator of some talent, boasting 22 solo hours. The first Allen solo, incidentally, was made on a Friday, the 13th, which should be a clue.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Chapter 39

WHEN THAT bottle was exhausted, he got another from the village bootlegger. It was pure escape. He held it in his hand and looked at it, remembering the days of his city practice. Now it was he who was seeking release and forgetfulness.

With the coming of morning he would hear Noel's whistle. It was a whistle Chris had taught him. "All policemen have flat feet" were the unsung words behind it, and Noel was thrilled with it. Chris whistled back and got carefully out of bed. This was his life, the life he had chosen. Don't think. Don't remember. Don't even hope. Live this day as it comes, and every day.

Chris was not entirely cut off from his past, of course. Now and then there was a letter from Ted. The gratis business was great, but everybody else was away. "You're not missing anything."

One day Ted wrote that he had joined a private clinic. "All the works," he said. "Our motto is, 'If one of us can't soak you, another will.'" They had taken a large suite of rooms in the new medical building, but there was still a vacant room or two, and when Chris came back . . .

There were letters from Katie, too. Cheerful letters from here and there, for she was making the usual summer round.

"I haven't written for a while. There is so much going on. Everybody seems gay and prosperous these days, which reminds me that I'll need a little extra money, Chris. The tips at these places are devastating. And do let me know how your arm is. Everybody asks, and I don't know what to say."

He sent her money, writing his checks with his left hand and swearing furiously over his clumsiness; but letters were too much for him. Now and then he sent her a night letter, dictating it over the telephone. But she did not reply.

Nevertheless he improved during those first few weeks. There was no visible change in his arm. He still wore his splint or, when he tired of it, the sling which supported it; he still took a drink or two at night to enable him to sleep. But his walk became sturdier; there was even some of the old eagerness in the forward thrust of his shoulders. And he was using his left hand with greater efficiency. He had learned to fill his pipe and to light it, to tie his necktie, and even with great care to fasten his shoes. One day he took a hoe and, going out into Letitia's garden, viciously attacked the weeds there. Some of the flowers went, too, in that assault of his; he sweated profusely, his back ached, the sun beat down on him mercilessly. But at the end he felt better, as if once more he had attacked and beaten something, and that night he slept and did not dream. After that it was a daily chore, and sometimes Noel helped him.

"You don't dig them out. You kill them!"

"That's because I have a buried desire to murder any number of people."

Noel looked puzzled, but Chris was reading psychiatry now, puzzling over the problem of whether a man and his life were the result of forces he could not control, or he himself determined it. He had thought always of the human body. Now he began to wonder whether there was something else, and if so, what it was. "Religion calls it God, philosophy calls it the absolute, biology calls it life, phychology calls it mind."

"Do you believe in God, Noel?"

"Sure. Don't you?"

As simple as that to Noel, hoeing wildly, his fair hair moist and his face red with effort. As simple as that. You got into trouble and asked God to help you, and He bent down from His great white throne and did so.

It was some time before the boy mentioned Chris' hand, and then he did so delicately.

"I don't suppose Mrs. Miller is much good with that bandage."

"She's awful," said Chris, with an eye on the house.

"If you like, I could come over and help in the mornings. I'd like to. I'm going to be a doctor some day."

"Then come along."

And so it was fixed. After that it came out into the open between them.

"How is it today?"

"Just the same."

"Funny, isn't it? It looks all right."

"It's asleep. You do the same when you're asleep, don't you?"

He could talk to the boy about his arm. To him there were no connotations of tragedy.

"I suppose it will get well sometime."

"Maybe. Maybe not. The thing to do is to be a sport about it, old chap."

HE WAS NOT much of a talker, young Noel. Years with Hiram had made him laconic. But on one subject he was loquacious enough. This was the study of medicine, and Chris, delving deep into his memory, found himself back in the early days at medical college, at the hospital, starting out on his own. There was a certain release in it; the boy perhaps gravely whitling on the step and Chris going back, going back.

"You didn't get much sleep in those days, did you?"

"I was young and strong."

"You're not so old now. At least you don't look old."

The boy was good for him. His world was expanding again, he thought with a faint grin. It included a boy and a dog now. But it was still very small, so small he could reach out and encompass it. Nevertheless he was better. The tight band around his head had relaxed, and it no longer exhausted him to work in the garden.

"Next year we'll put in some vegetables," said Noel, mature and practical. "That's a real jo."

"Now, that's an idea!"

But his heart sank. Next year! And the year after that, and so on to the end of life, Chris found himself staring blankly into the future. Next year, and the next, and the next. Katie playing through her days, Beverly. God knows where, and he himself . . .

One thing, however, happened, that summer. He definitely abandoned any idea of suicide. He was seeing the thing through. Noel helped him there, too. He was normal and healthy. He would wander over, his feet bare, his overalls faded and patched, to look at Chris seriously from under his heavy thatch of hair.

"Looks as if the fish are rising in the creek, if you feel like trying it."

"I'll try anything once, son."

And they would go together, the man and the boy. Chris, looking down at the indomitable young figure, would feel himself strangely stirred. Why hadn't he had a boy like this? Why indeed hadn't he had this boy?

Young Noel would leave him settled somewhere along the stream and then wander off; and Chris would cast with his left hand, jerking the fish out onto the grass; but sometimes he was unable to release the hook himself, and Noel would find him sitting quietly on the bank, a small dead trout beside him. Chris' face, turned toward him, would be smiling but bleak.

"Couldn't make the grade, son."

"Sorry. Have you been waiting long?"

"Only a minute or two."

But Noel would find the fish very dead indeed, and know that Chris had been sitting there, silent and alone, for a long time.

It came as a blow when the summer was over and the boy had to go back to school. Chris, seeing him young and forlorn on the station platform, felt a shorp contraction of the heart. He wanted almost fiercely to catch him to him, to hold him close for one minute. Instead he shook hands gravely, saving the boy's dignity and his own self-control.

"Good-by old pal," he said. "It won't be long until you're back again. Then we'll have some high old times."

"Three months," said Noel, in a flat voice. "And maybe you won't be here then."

"I'll be here, don't worry."

Amy was frankly crying as the train moved out, and Hiram was trying to comfort her. Surely the boy had love enough—if Ursula could look down from some heavenly mountain top and see him. But in the hard light of the autumn day Chris saw that both of them looked old—old and tired. Whatever the boy was to be, they would not live to see it, and they knew it. He felt a wave of pity for them, that this young life had come to them too late. When they got into Hiram's rattling car, Chris put his arm around Amy.

"He's a fine boy, my dear. You and Hiram have done a good job."

"And some day," said Amy drearily, "we'll be going on, Chris, and he will be left behind."

"Not alone, Amy. Not while I live. That's a promise."

CHRIS MISSED Ned even more than he had expected. The days were growing shorter now, and Leititia's autumn flowers turned brown and drooped on their sapless stalks. The evenings became intolerably long, and Chris, lighting his fire in David's study after Mrs. Miller had gone, would read as long as he could, and then sit for long hours staring into his fire. Now and then he would rub his arm, working gently. There was very little atrophy, but the hand still hung, without its splint, a dead and heavy thing. He would put every ounce in him into the will to move his fingers, but they gave him no response. And he was doing just that late one night when he heard a car outside and the clicking of high heels on the porch. It was Katie.

She came in, rosy with health and the frosty air, blithe and cheerful. "Well!" she said. "Of all the places to find! I've been all over the country. And what a place when you do find it!"

He stood there, staring down at her, trying to smile, trying to welcome her. "You look as if you've had a good summer."

"I can't wait to tell you about it. Can you bring in my bags, Chris? Or is there somebody here to do it?"

"I'm alone, as it happens, but I can bring them," Chris said.

He went out into the dark, glad for a moment of readjustment. When he came back, Katie had made a quick survey of her surroundings and was waiting for him in the hall.

She was an incongruous but attractive figure standing there in her smart clothes, her high-heeled pumps. Amazing how young she looked, he thought. A triffe pathetic, too, in those surroundings. There was a place for her somewhere. She had something to give: her vitality, her galety, even her cheerful inconsequence. But she did not belong there, nor to him.

"You must be tired," he said. "We can talk tomorrow. Now you'd better get to bed."

She agreed. The cheerfulness had gone out of her face, and she was silent as he led the way up the stairs.

"I'm in here," he told her and showed her that room of David's and Letitia's with its broad bed. "You can sleep here or—there are other rooms. I'm afraid they're not ready for visitors."

But she elected a room of her own, and he was aware of a certain relief.

"We'd only keep each other awake," she said practically. "And I'd like to sleep in the morning. I suppose I can have my breakfast in bed."

"I dare say Mrs. Miller can manage. It will be a novelty to her, I imagine!"

It took two heavy slugs of Scotch to send him to sleep that night, and the next morning he saw, as he shaved, that his eyes were congested. He would have to watch himself, he thought. It was too easy, that escape of his.

KATIE stayed for a week. Chris, watching her, knew that she had intended to stay longer. She had unpacked all her bags, set out the innumerable trifles which were important to her. In the mornings, he would hear Mrs. Miller carrying up a tray, and sometimes a word or two of conversation.

"I don't know as there's enough water for your bath, Mrs. Arden. I'm washing today."

"Well, so am I! The washing can wait."

There was constant conflict between them over such small matters as the food, the service, even Katie's bed.

"If this is the food you've been giving Dr. Arden, no wonder he looks thin."

"Maybe he's got other things than his meals to worry him."

Katie tried, he knew. They both tried. But the life was too much for her. Sitting at the table, she would make talk of this house party or that; and one day out of a clear sky she said she had seen Beverly that summer.

"Where was that?"

"Bar Harbor. She wasn't going out much. Just taking walks and things like that."

She dismissed Beverly then, as if she did not count; but she could not dismiss this burial alive which was Chris' life now. She kept on trying for a while. One afternoon Amy and the other daughters-in-law paid a formal call, and Katie watched them from a window as they came across the fields.

"Here come the missionary society."

"Probably laying up treasures in heaven!"

Nevertheless she did her best that day to be friendly, and it was not entirely her fault that she failed. They sat there in Letitia's stiff parlor, staring at her short hair, her careful make-up, and her painted fingernails, and found little or nothing to say to her. They left with evident relief, and Katie collapsed into a chair and lighted a cigarette.

"Well," she said flippantly, "That's one examination I didn't pass!"

One day Katie came home from a walk in her stocking feet, carrying her shoes, and that night she told Chris she was going.

"I'm not made for this sort of thing," she said. "I like lights and pavements and people, Chris. And you don't really want me here, do you?"

"I want you if you want to stay."

She grew shrewish then. "You won't take any of the responsibility, will you? It's up to me. If I go, I desert you. That's what every one will say, isn't it?"

"Does it matter so much what they say?"

"Not to you, I suppose. It never did. It does to me."

He moved in his chair. "Katie," he said slowly, "why did you take that letter of mine, years ago? The one from Beverly Lewis?"

She looked terrified. The color drained out of her face. "What letter? I don't know what you are talking about!"

"Then it doesn't matter," he said quietly. "When do you want to leave here? Tomorrow?"

A.H. Bumstead, Cartographer, Dies Here at 64

Noted Inventor Left Many Contributions To Science's Advance

Albert H. Bumstead, 64, cartographer and inventor, died yesterday at his home, 2940 Carlton avenue northeast.

Chief Cartographer of the National Geographic Society for 25 years, Mr. Bumstead supervised preparation of plates for more than 33,000,000 copies of maps that have found their way into offices and schools all over the world.

He is credited with first use of type photography for placing names on crowded maps and the development of new and more exact methods for projecting the earth's curved surface onto maps. He was the author of an improved set of tables for computing geographical measurements.

Invented Byrd's Compass

Mr. Bumstead invented a sun compass for the first Byrd Arctic flight in 1925. Admiral Byrd later described the Bumstead compass as the instrument "that made it possible for us to fly with confidence to the North Pole and to the South Pole and to find our way back."

A peak in the Queen Maud Range near the South Pole was named by Byrd in Mr. Bumstead's honor.

His hobbies were gem-cutting, astronomy and bas-relief sculpture. He cut and polished the glass for a 7-inch telescope reflector, magnifying the stars and planets 300 times. He relaxed from the exacting demands of his profession by cutting stones of New Hampshire quartz or Montana agate into 50 or 100 facets.

Descended from an old New England family, he was educated at Worcester Academy, Worcester Polytechnic Institute and Harvard. He was associated for a number of years with the United States Geological Survey, which still uses the "Bumstead tripod" on field parties, as well as the instrument he devised for laying down parallels and meridians on field sheets of topographic maps.

On Peruvian Expedition

Mr. Bumstead served as cartographer for the joint expedition from 1912 to 1915. He was elected to the United States Board on Geographical Names in 1934.

Through his correspondence with foreign officials, geographic societies and missionaries he built up a valuable reference library constantly consulted by Government departments.

NLRB Lawyer Tells of Talk With Examiner; Consultation Against Rule, Says Spokesman

Vassar Graduate Identifies Memo At Smith Hearing

By John B. Oakes

A smartly dressed young Vassar graduate, review attorney for the NLRB, was confronted on the Smith committee witness stand yesterday with evidence that she had conferred with an NLRB trial examiner in regard to a pending case.

A spokesman for the board told The Post last night that even in 1938, when the incident occurred, board rules forbade any such contact, but he said a written order to that effect had been sent out only a month ago, after the Smith committee investigating the board had embarked upon its inquiry.

(The examiner's duty is to file with the board an "intermediate report" on labor cases, while the review attorney digests the evidence and presents it to the board in summarized form.)

The witness, Mrs. Margaret Bennett Porter, identified a memorandum she wrote to her supervisor August 17, 1938, on a case involving the Lady Ester Lingerie Corporation and the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. Wrote Mrs. Porter:

"Trial examiner tells me that the respondent admitted after the hearing that it had formed the company union . . . The trial examiner also says that the respondent tried to bribe him by sending underwear to his wife. After talking to him, I think my version of the evidence is correct where it differs from his."

In an accompanying memo, Mrs. Porter cited several points in the Lady Esther case in which she differed from the findings of the trial examiner. Earlier in the day Committee Counsel Edmund M. Toland had spent much time in attempting to show that review attorneys did make findings and arrive at conclusions in reporting to the board—although, he indicated, the Wagner act reserved these functions to the board.

Preceding Mrs. Porter to the stand was another attractive young review attorney for the NLRB, Mrs. Julius Schlezinger, who insisted that in presenting to the board a summary of the evidence in any case she stated no conclusions or findings of her own. She said that, in going over the evidence, she passed on the credibility of witnesses "only when it seems so clear to me to be beyond question."

"Under those circumstances," she admitted in reply to Toland, she did make "conclusions" in analyzing and summarizing the record.

Mrs. Schlezinger, who testified under her maiden name of Miss Anne Freeling, told the committee she supposed the board had no means of evaluating the accuracy or adequacy of digests presented by the review attorneys, other than its confidence in its own agents.

Mrs. Schlezinger testified that her official working hours were from 9 to 4:30, but that interest in the job had prompted her and most other employes of the board to work "a good many more."

MARGARET B. PORTER,

Toland and Murdock Clash; Exchange Is Stricken From Record

While she was on the stand, Toland continued his inquiry of the previous day into the American Radiator Co. case in 1937-38, in which the board, reversing a tentative decision, had found there was a lockout of employes to discourage union organization. The company carried the case to court.

A consent decree settlement was reached while the case was pending in court, and shrotly thereafter David Shaw, a board attorney, wrote that the agreement was "a damned sight better than I thought we could get."

"It seems as though justice is always geographical," he added in a letter introduced in evidence. "All of us agree that in the Eighth Circuit, where the case was taken, we would probably get licked in toto," he wrote, while in the Ninth the board would win a "complete victory."

Yesterday's hearings saw a continuation of the warfare between Toland and Representative Murdock (Democrat), of Utah. When the New Deal Representative protested that Toland had interrupted Mrs. Schlezinger, Toland snapped, "I'm not trying to stop her. I resent the implication—"

Albert Berres Funeral Today;

Funeral for Albert J. Berres, 66, retired motion picture official and labor authority, will be at 9 a. m. today at the home of his brother, Frank J. Berres, 3212 Seventeenth street northeast, followed by requiem mass at 9:30 a. m. at St. Joseph's Catholic Church and burial in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Mr. Berres died Sunday at his brother's home following a long illness.

He was born in Washington and started work as a pattern maker's apprentice at the Navy Yard. Employed at the yard for many years, in 1912 he was elected secretary-treasurer of the metal trades department of the American Federation of Labor.

He was appointed to the Shipbuilding Labor Adjustment Board by President Wilson and also was a member of the wartime Naval Wage Board of Review. In 1926 he went to California as industrial secretary of the Motion Picture Association, remaining in Hollywood until his retirement five years ago. He was drafted by President Roosevelt in 1934 to serve on the Federal Aviation Commission.

Surviving are a son, Albert J. Berres, of Detroit, Mich., and two grandsons, besides his mother.

Charles T. Chaney Funeral to Be Held Tomorrow

Services will be held tomorrow for Charles T. Chaney, of Chaney, Md., prominent Calvert County farmer-banker and reputed to be the oldest resident of the county, who died Monday night.

Last surviving member of Capt. Franklin T. Griffith's cavalry company, Mr. Chaney served in the Confederate army during the War Between the States.

Rites will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow in Shiloh Methodist Episcopal Church, Dunkirk, Md., with burial in the church cemetery.

Charles Herrmann Funeral Services To Be Tomorrow

Elk ceremonies for Charles F. Herrmann, 71, a manufacturing jeweler, who died Monday night, will be held at 7 p. m. today at T. Frank Murray funeral home. After rites at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow also at Murray's, Masonic services will be held immediately before interment at Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Herrmann died Monday at Sibley Hospital, after a week's illness. He lived at 2100 Fourth street northeast.

Surviving are his wife, the former Marie Wein, and a son, Carl F. Herrmann. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.
